THE ABADDON HOTEL

HELL HOUSE LLC

Despite the team being terrified and wanting to leave, Alex pushes forward with the project because all their money and financial futures are on the line.

Character Role

Alex Taylor

The owner and organizer of the haunted-house attraction, Abaddon Hotel.

Sara Havel

A member of the production team who helps document and investigate the events.

Paul O'Keefe

A member of Alex's team who helps prepare the haunted house.

Tony Tully

A member of the crew and one of the people involved in setting up the attraction.

Mitchell

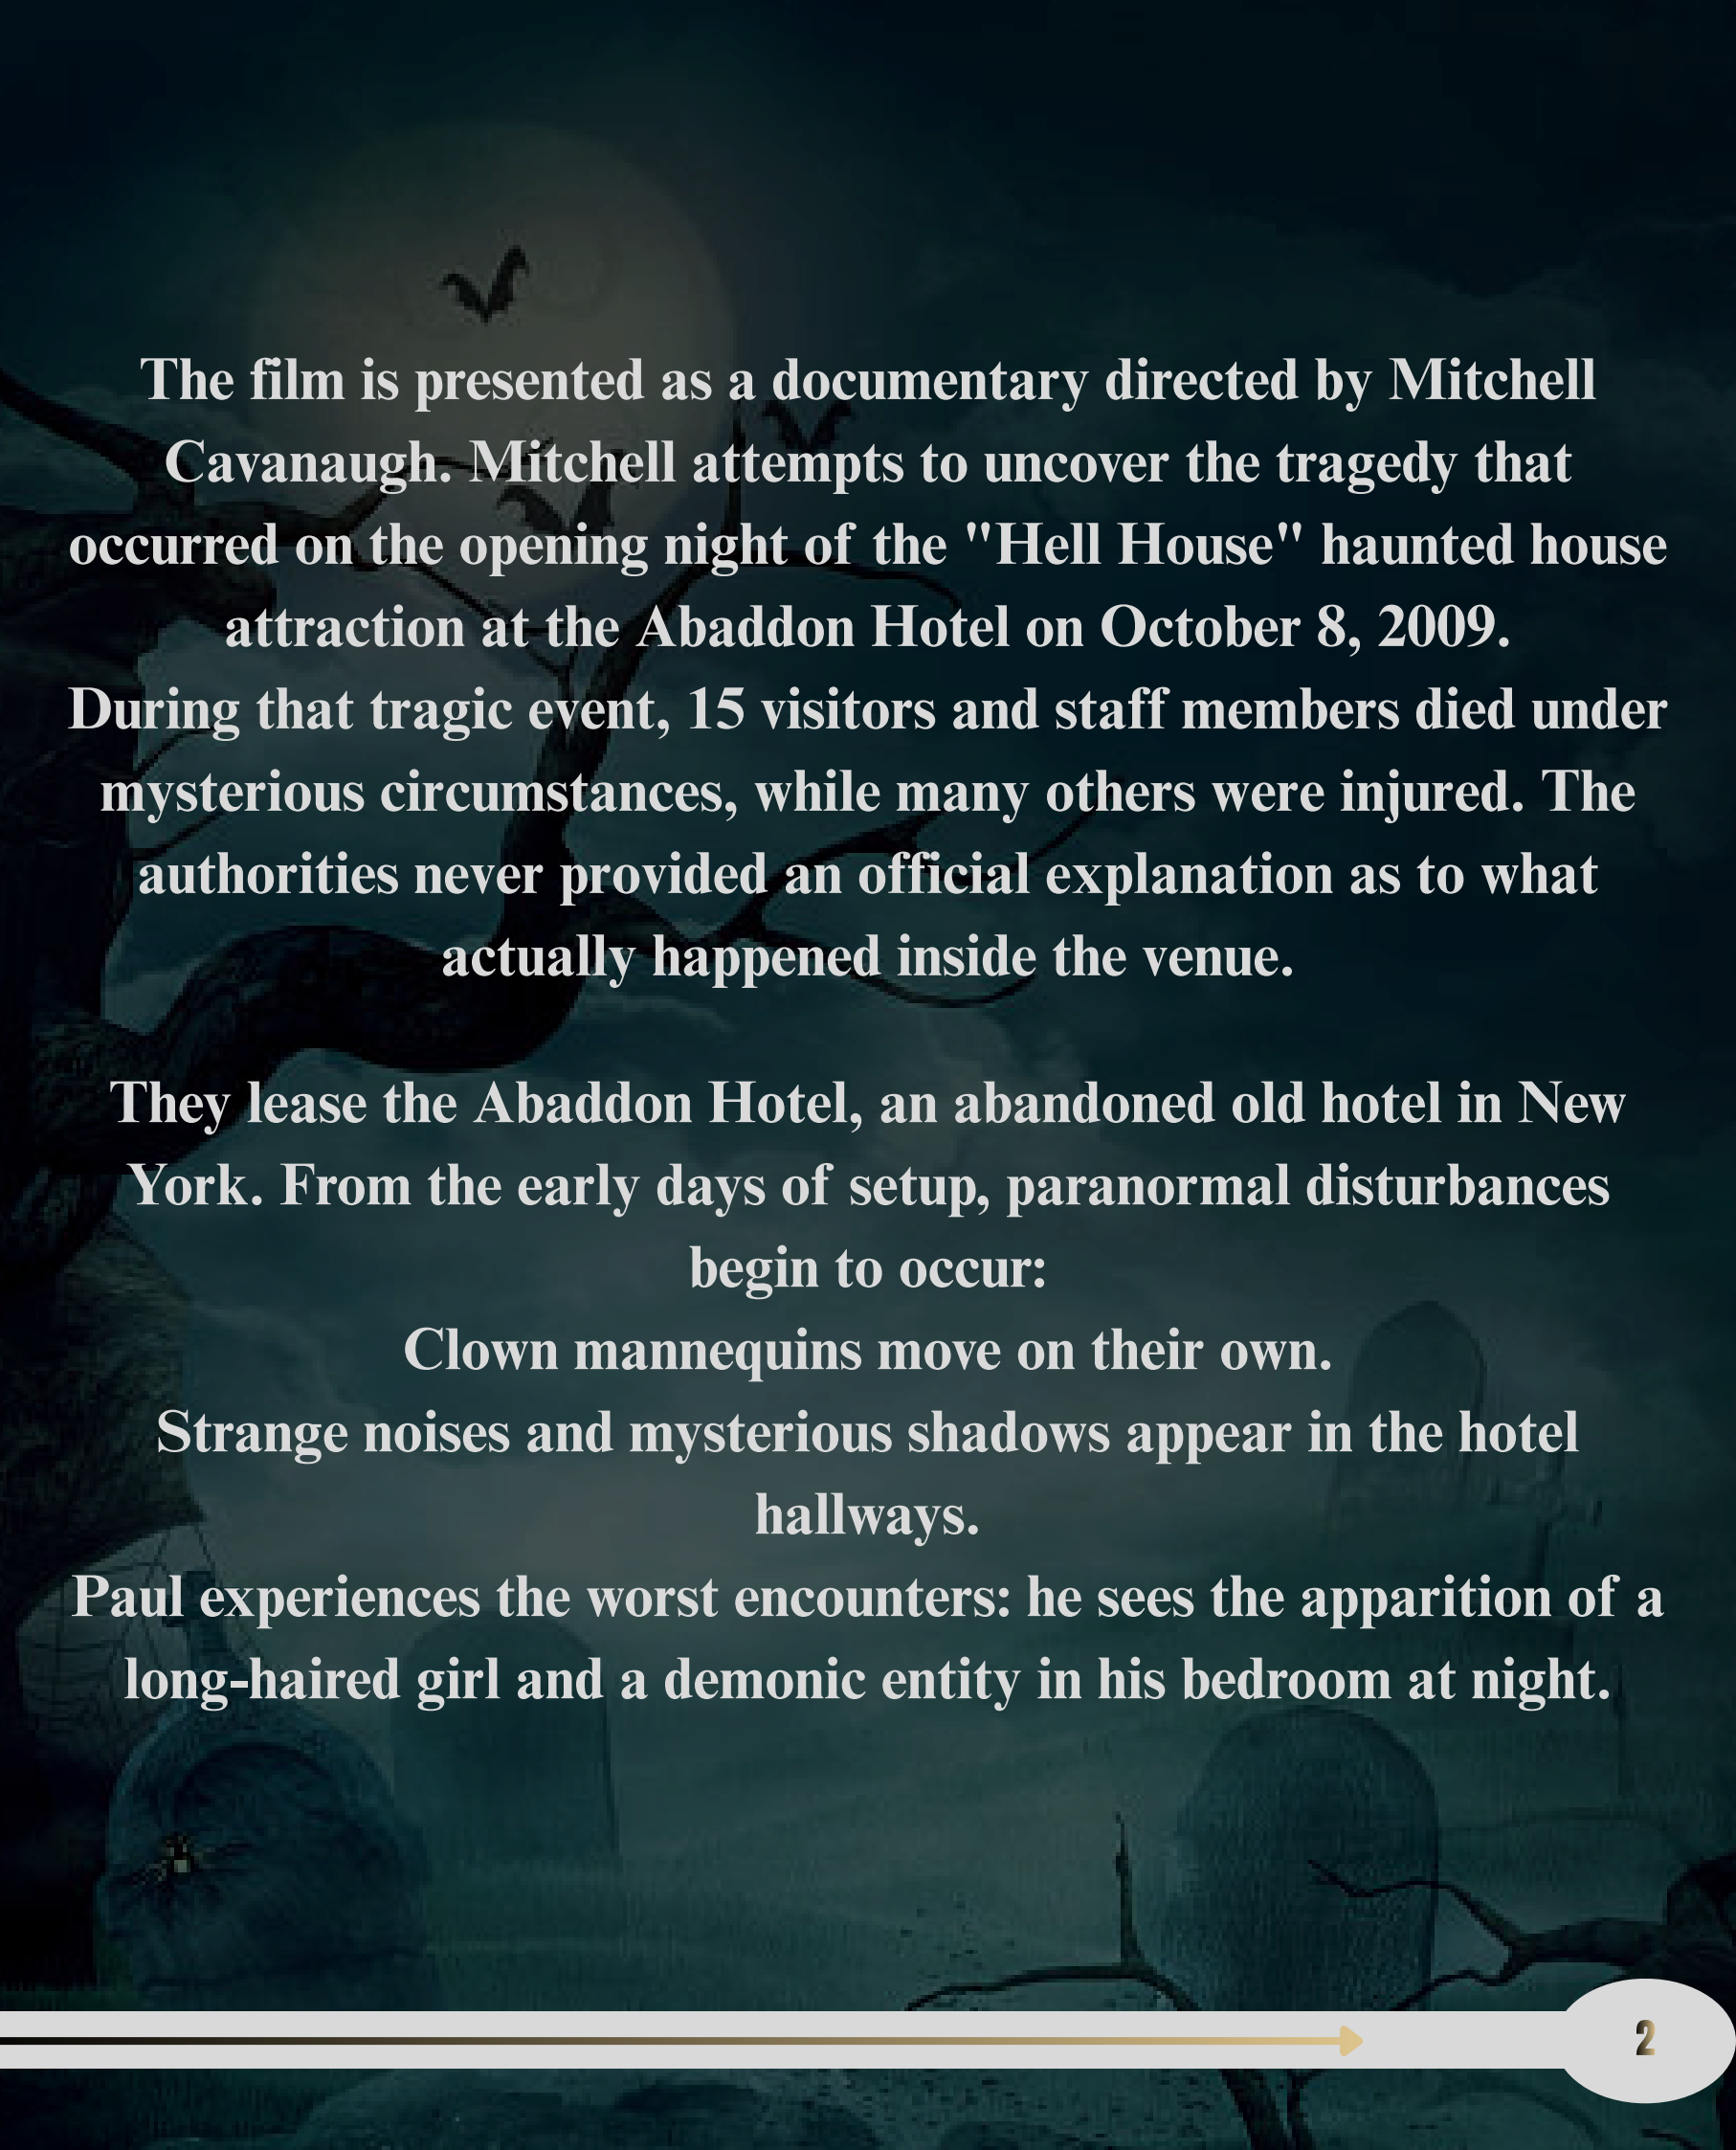

A member of the production crew who works at the haunted house.

Diane Graves

A woman connected to the investigation and the events surrounding the Abaddon Hotel.

The Clown / Abaddon Hotel Entity

A terrifying supernatural presence associated with the haunted house.

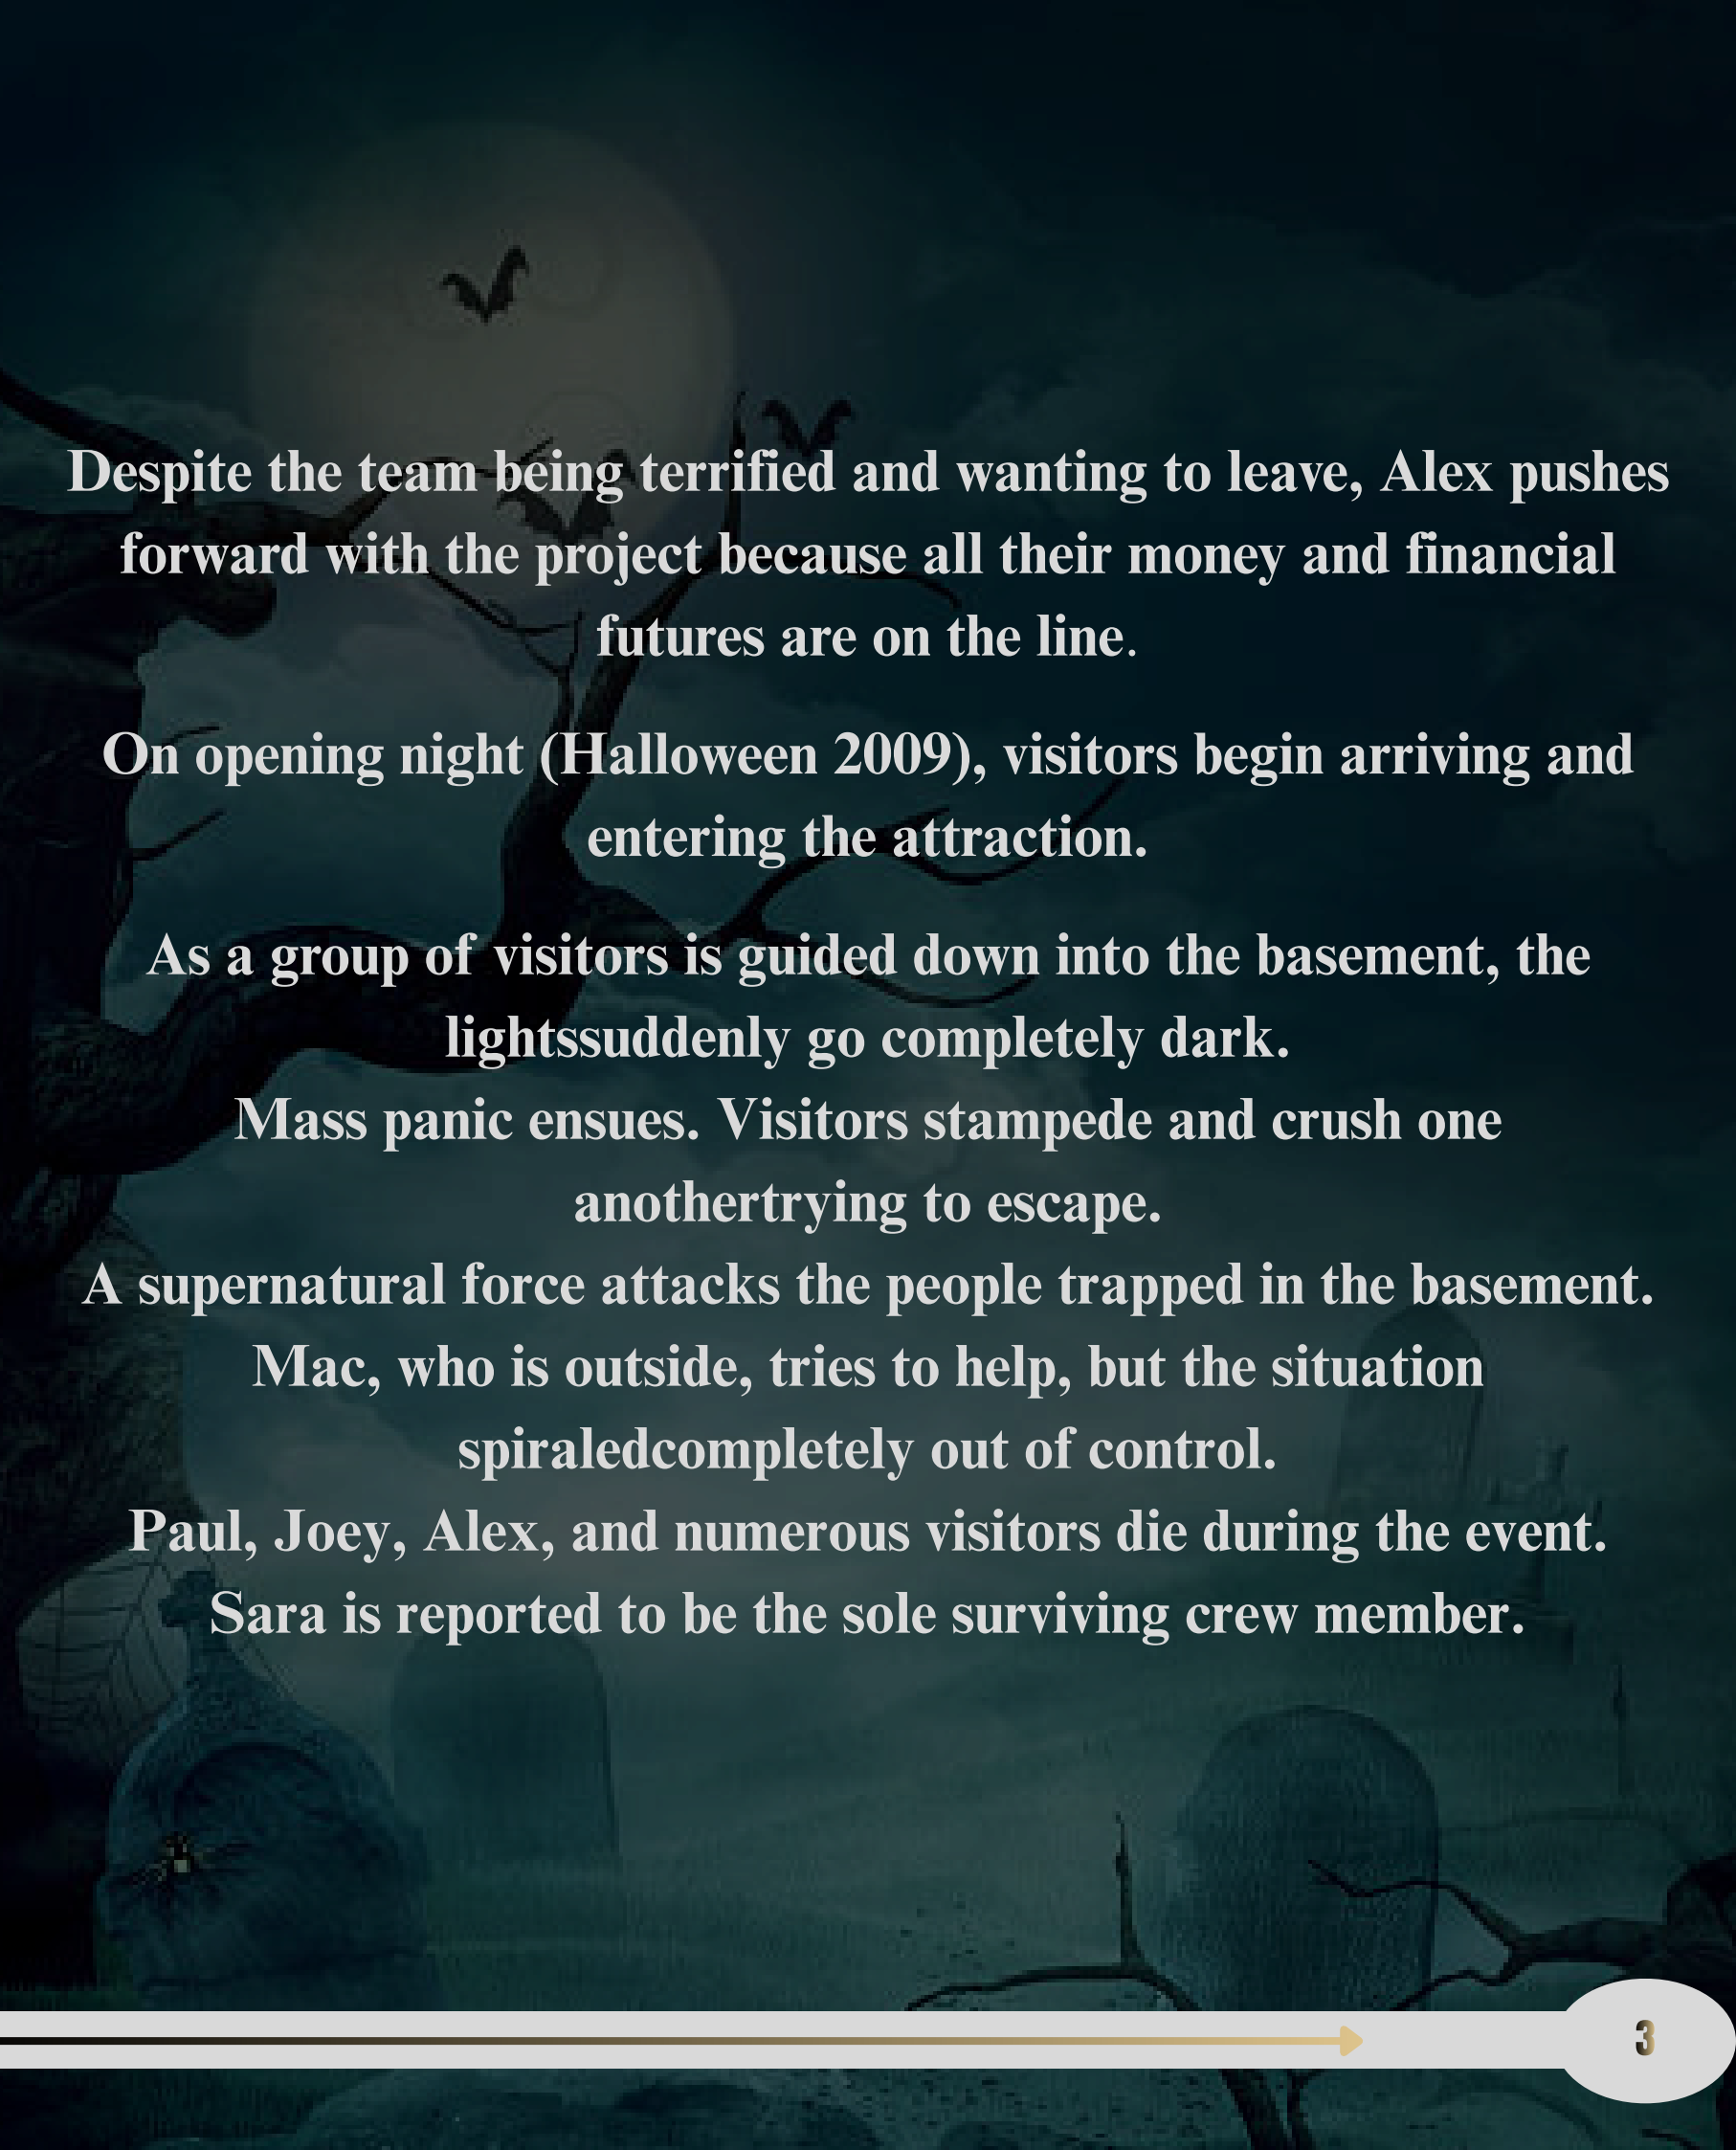

The film is presented as a documentary directed by Mitchell Cavanaugh. Mitchell attempts to uncover the tragedy that occurred on the opening night of the "Hell House" haunted house attraction at the Abaddon Hotel on October 8, 2009. During that tragic event, 15 visitors and staff members died under mysterious circumstances, while many others were injured. The authorities never provided an official explanation as to what actually happened inside the venue.

They lease the Abaddon Hotel, an abandoned old hotel in New York. From the early days of setup, paranormal disturbances begin to occur:

Clown mannequins move on their own.

Strange noises and mysterious shadows appear in the hotel hallways.

Paul experiences the worst encounters: he sees the apparition of a long-haired girl and a demonic entity in his bedroom at night.

Despite the team being terrified and wanting to leave, Alex pushes forward with the project because all their money and financial futures are on the line.

On opening night (Halloween 2009), visitors begin arriving and entering the attraction.

As a group of visitors is guided down into the basement, the lights suddenly go completely dark.

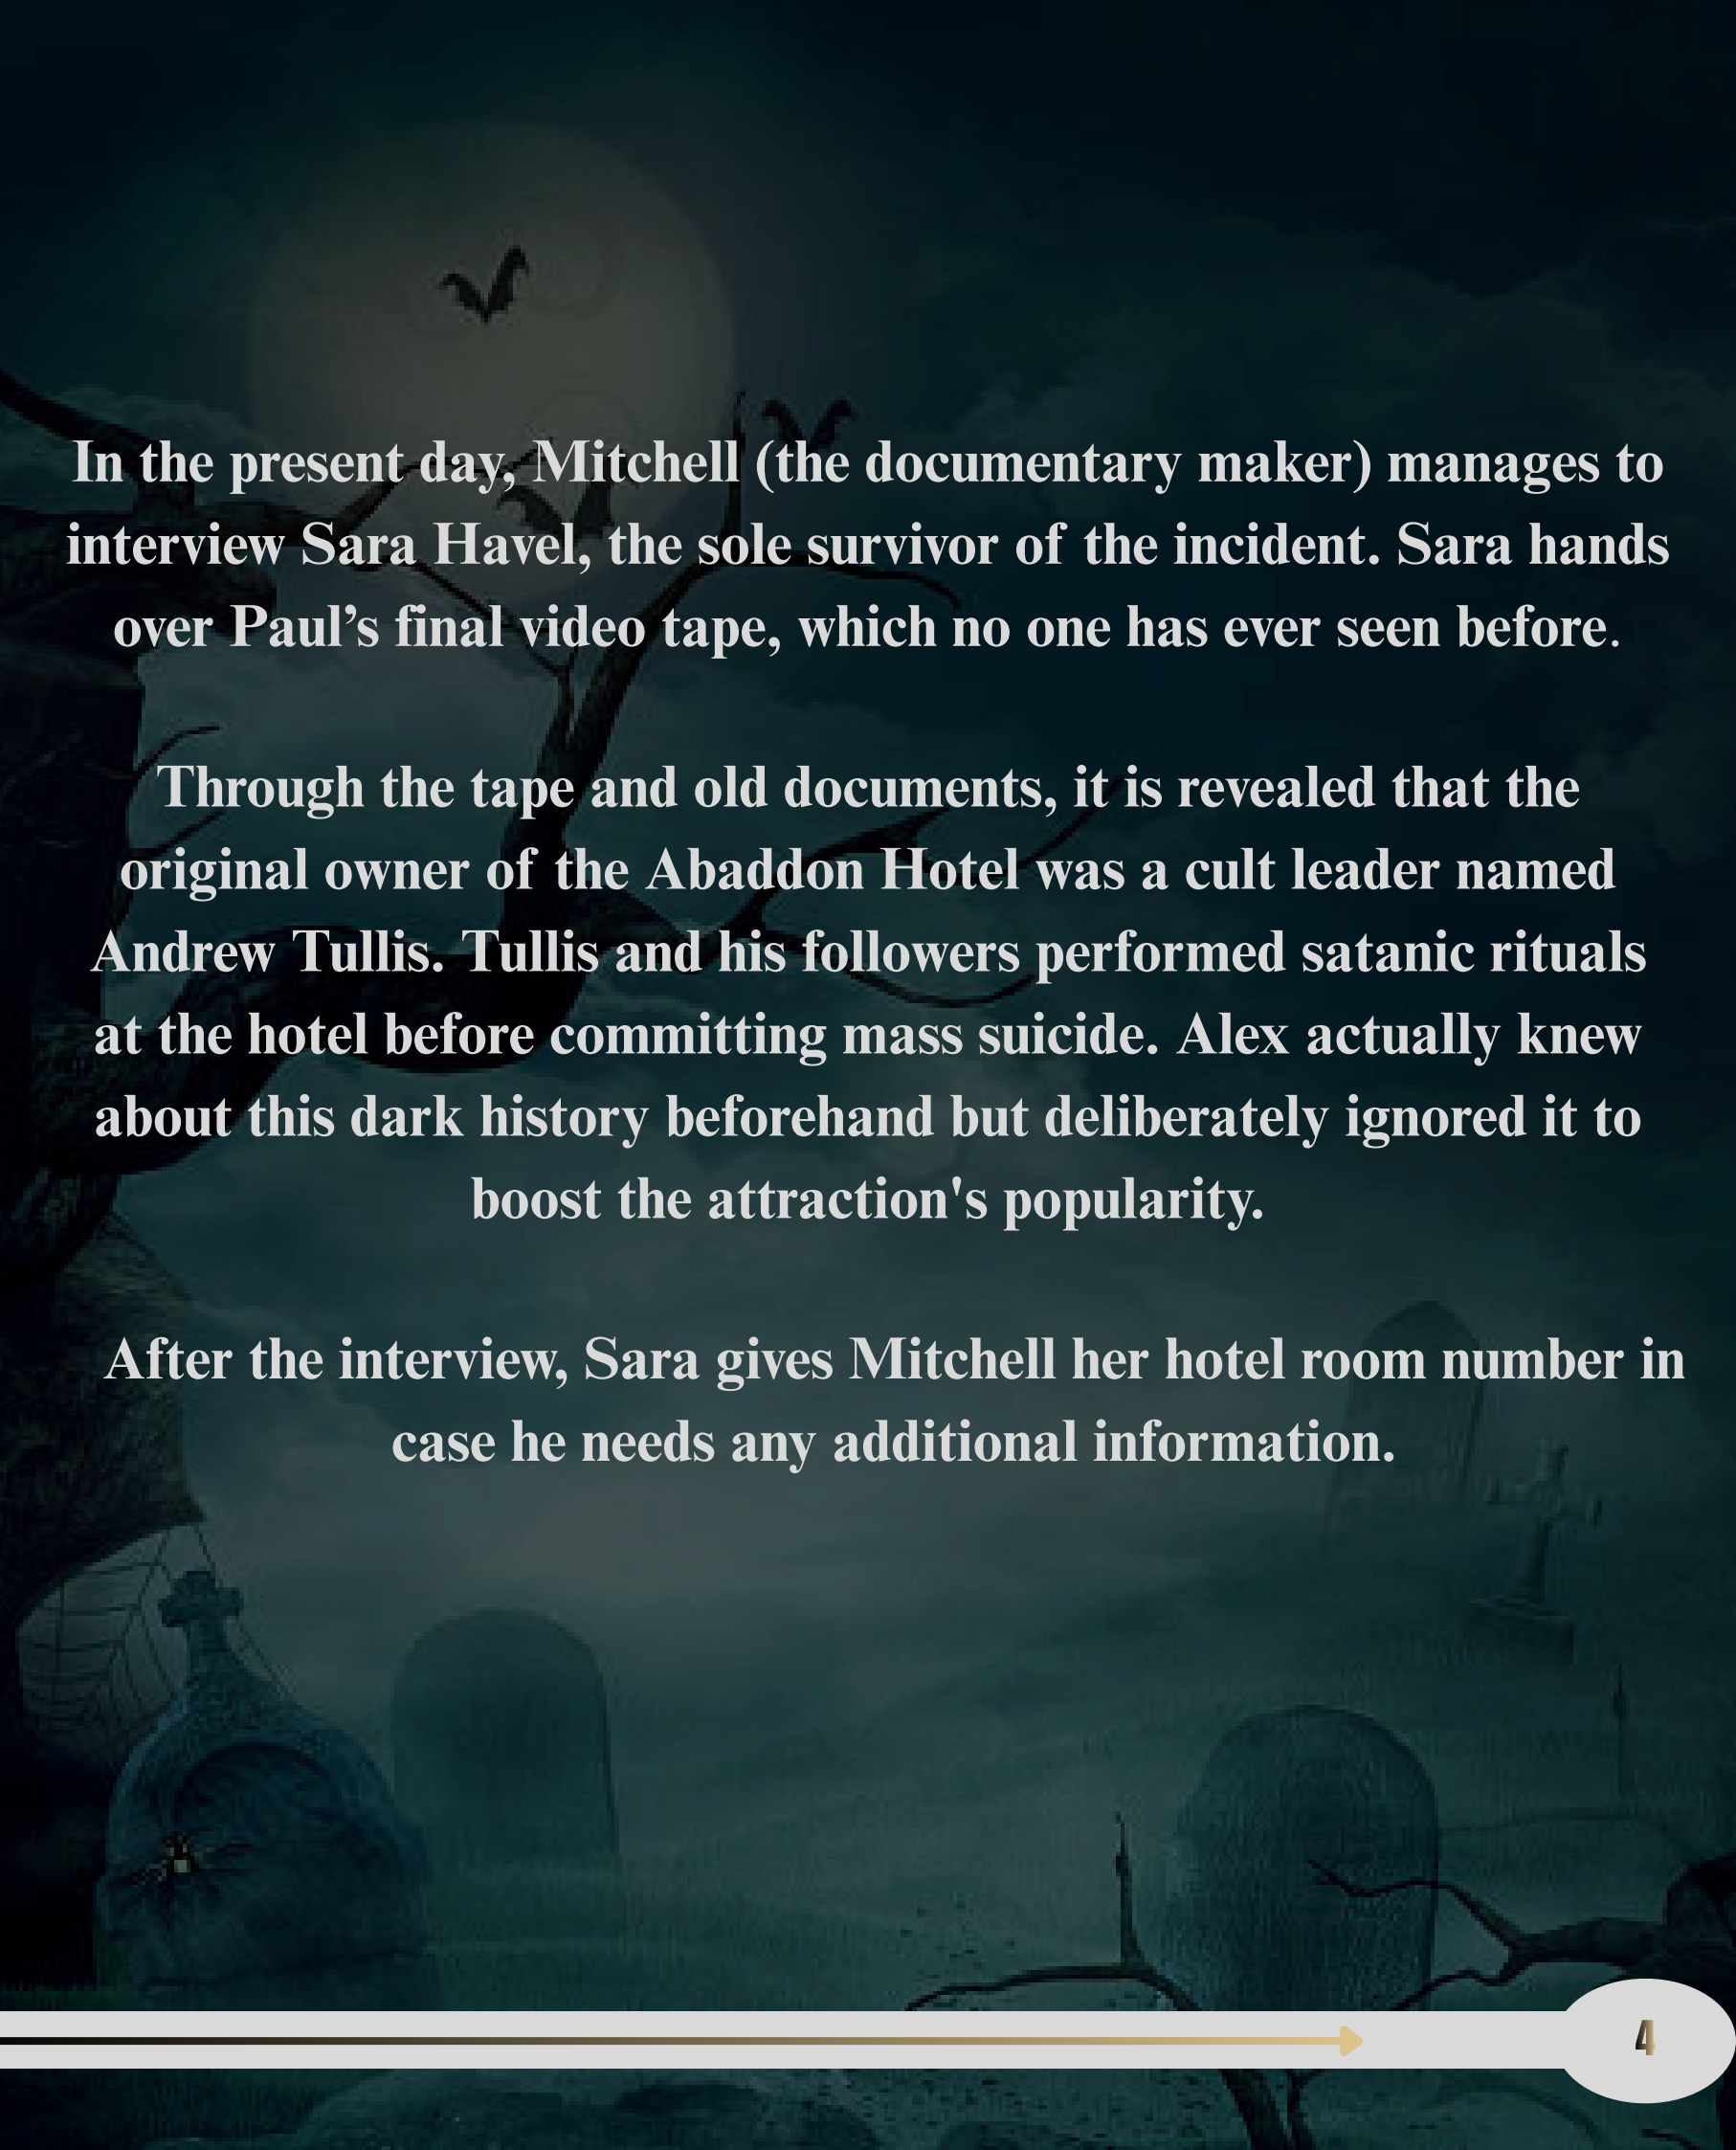

Mass panic ensues. Visitors stampede and crush one another trying to escape.

A supernatural force attacks the people trapped in the basement.

Mac, who is outside, tries to help, but the situation spirals completely out of control.

Paul, Joey, Alex, and numerous visitors die during the event.

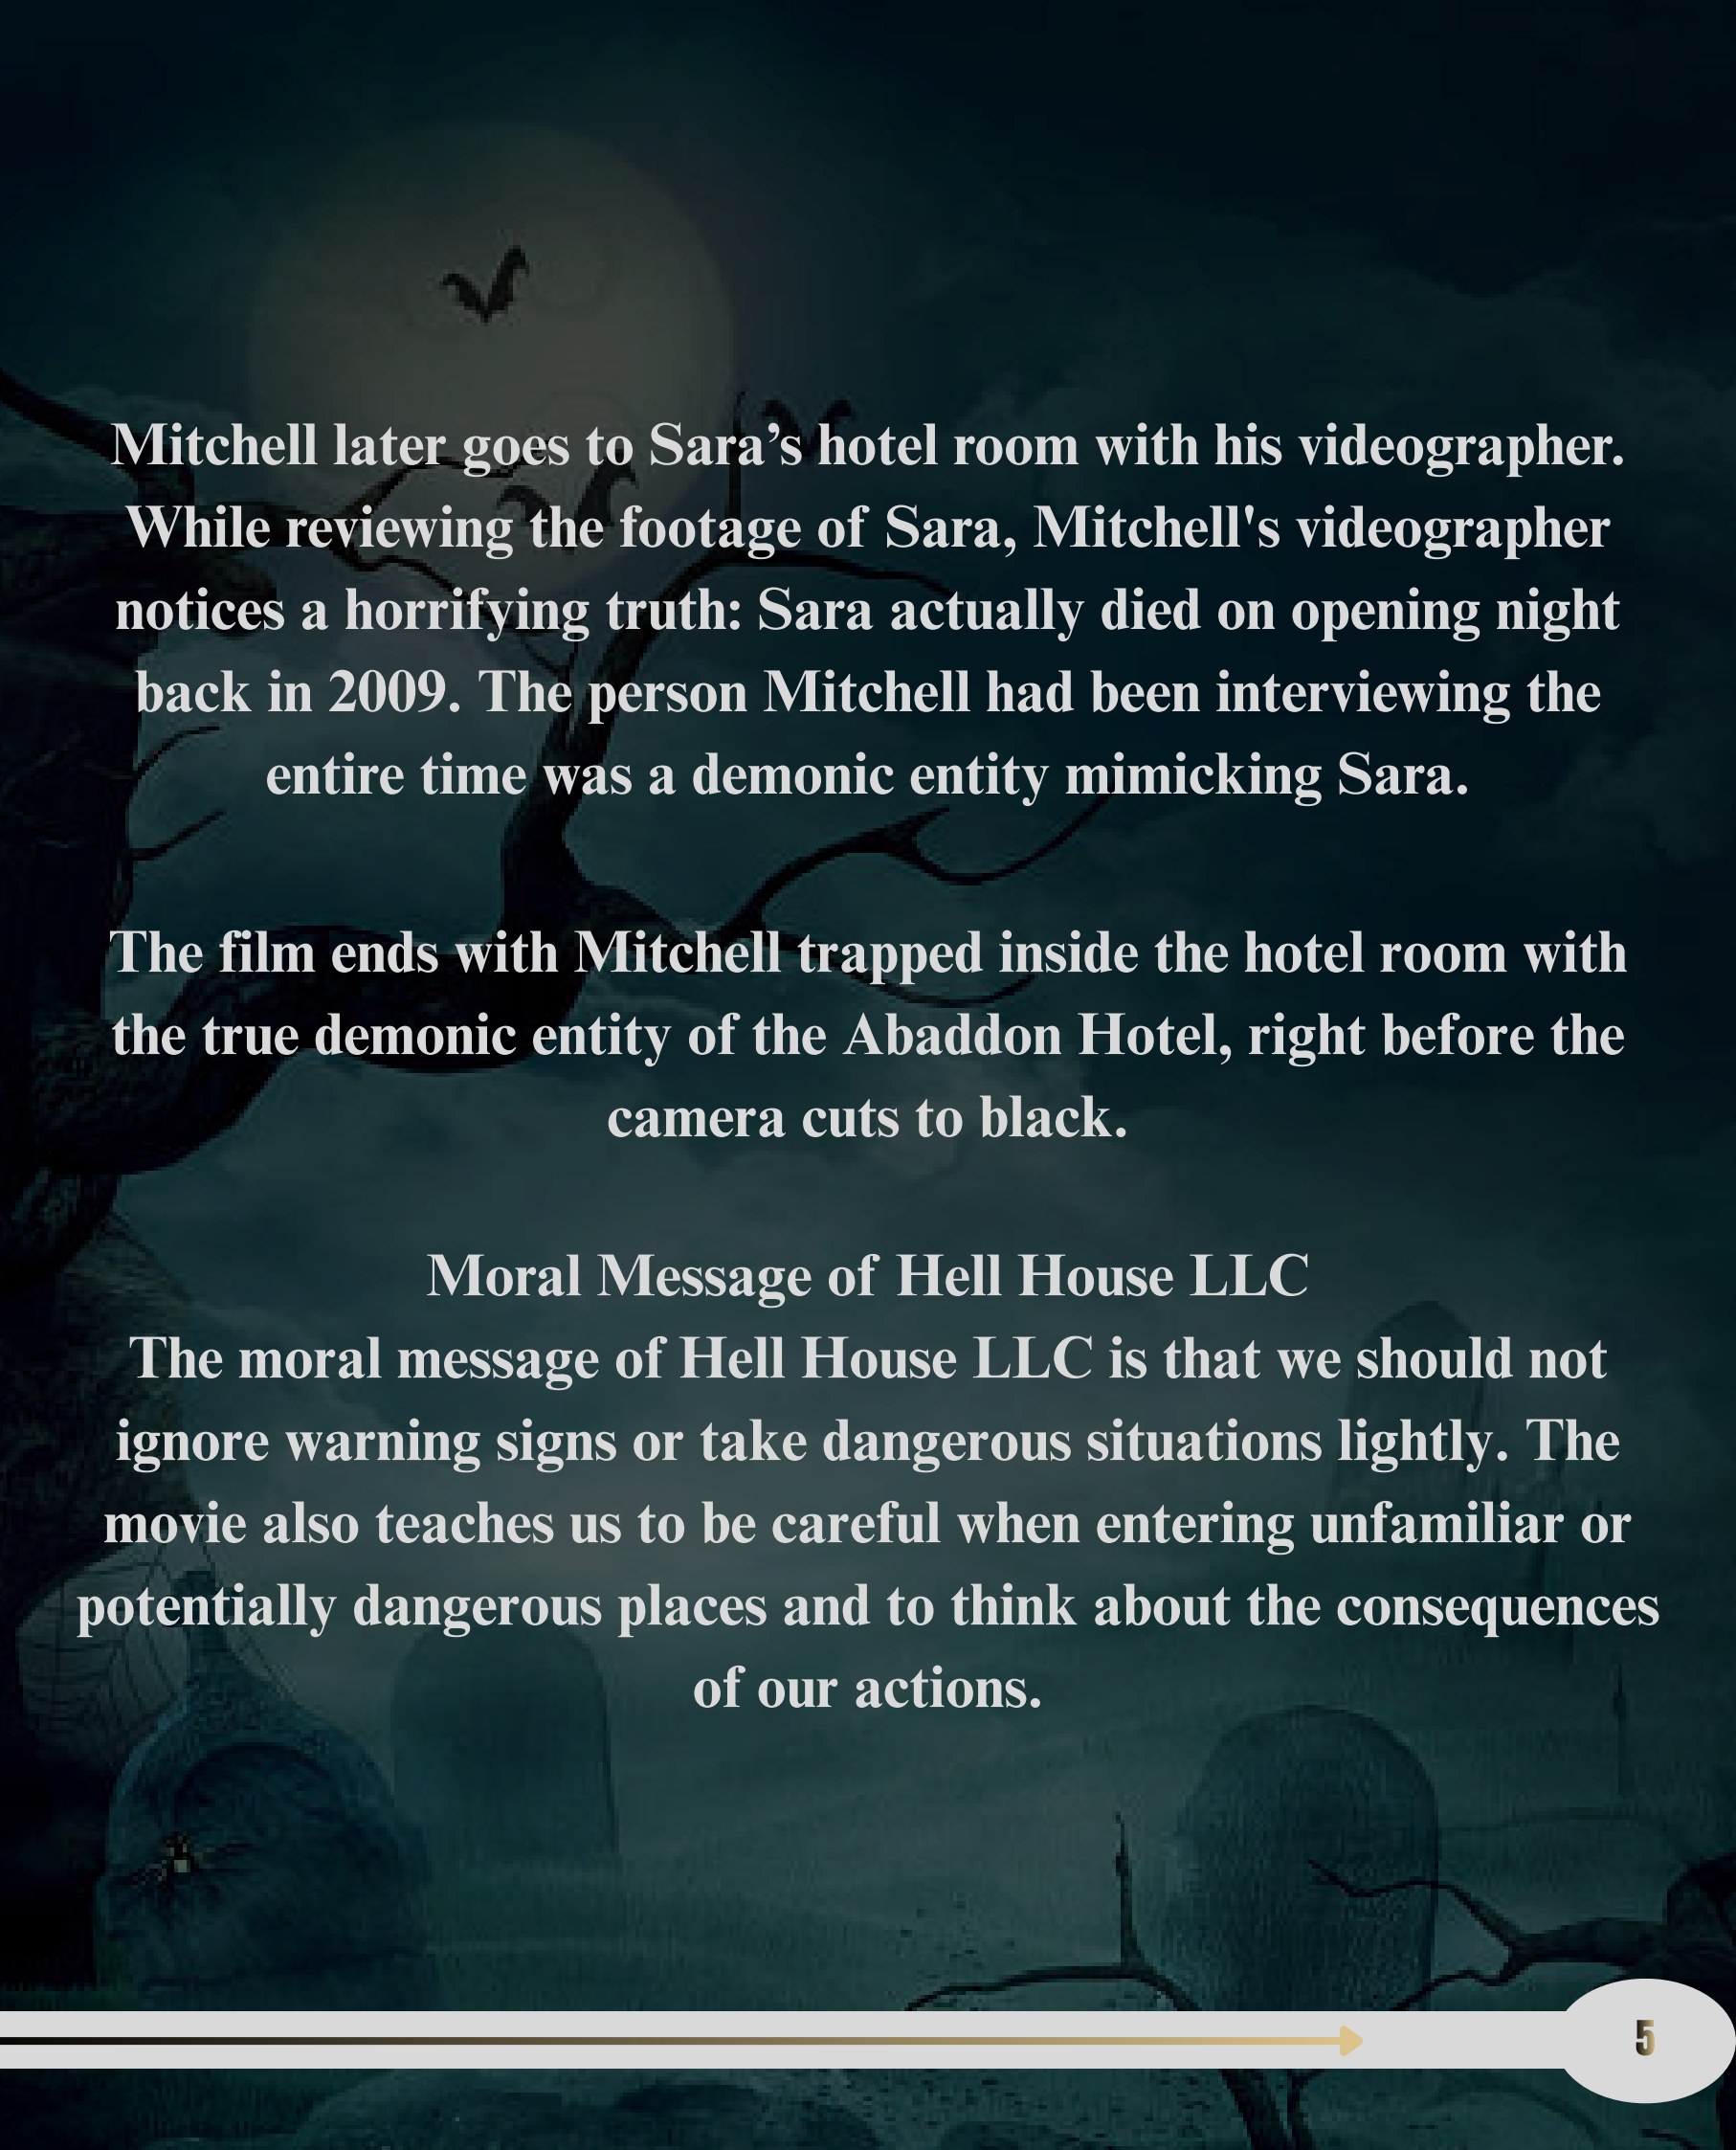

Sara is reported to be the sole surviving crew member.

In the present day, Mitchell (the documentary maker) manages to interview Sara Havel, the sole survivor of the incident. Sara hands over Paul's final video tape, which no one has ever seen before.

Through the tape and old documents, it is revealed that the original owner of the Abaddon Hotel was a cult leader named Andrew Tullis. Tullis and his followers performed satanic rituals at the hotel before committing mass suicide. Alex actually knew about this dark history beforehand but deliberately ignored it to boost the attraction's popularity.

After the interview, Sara gives Mitchell her hotel room number in case he needs any additional information.

Mitchell later goes to Sara's hotel room with his videographer. While reviewing the footage of Sara, Mitchell's videographer notices a horrifying truth: Sara actually died on opening night back in 2009. The person Mitchell had been interviewing the entire time was a demonic entity mimicking Sara.

The film ends with Mitchell trapped inside the hotel room with the true demonic entity of the Abaddon Hotel, right before the camera cuts to black.

One night, their home is attacked by members of a cult. One of the attackers takes the Annabelle doll and performs a ritual before eventually dying.

After this incident, strange things begin happening in John and Mia's house.

Mia notices that the Annabelle doll keeps mysteriously changing places. Strange noises and unexplained events also start occurring around the house.

Mia eventually discovers that a demonic entity is connected to the doll.

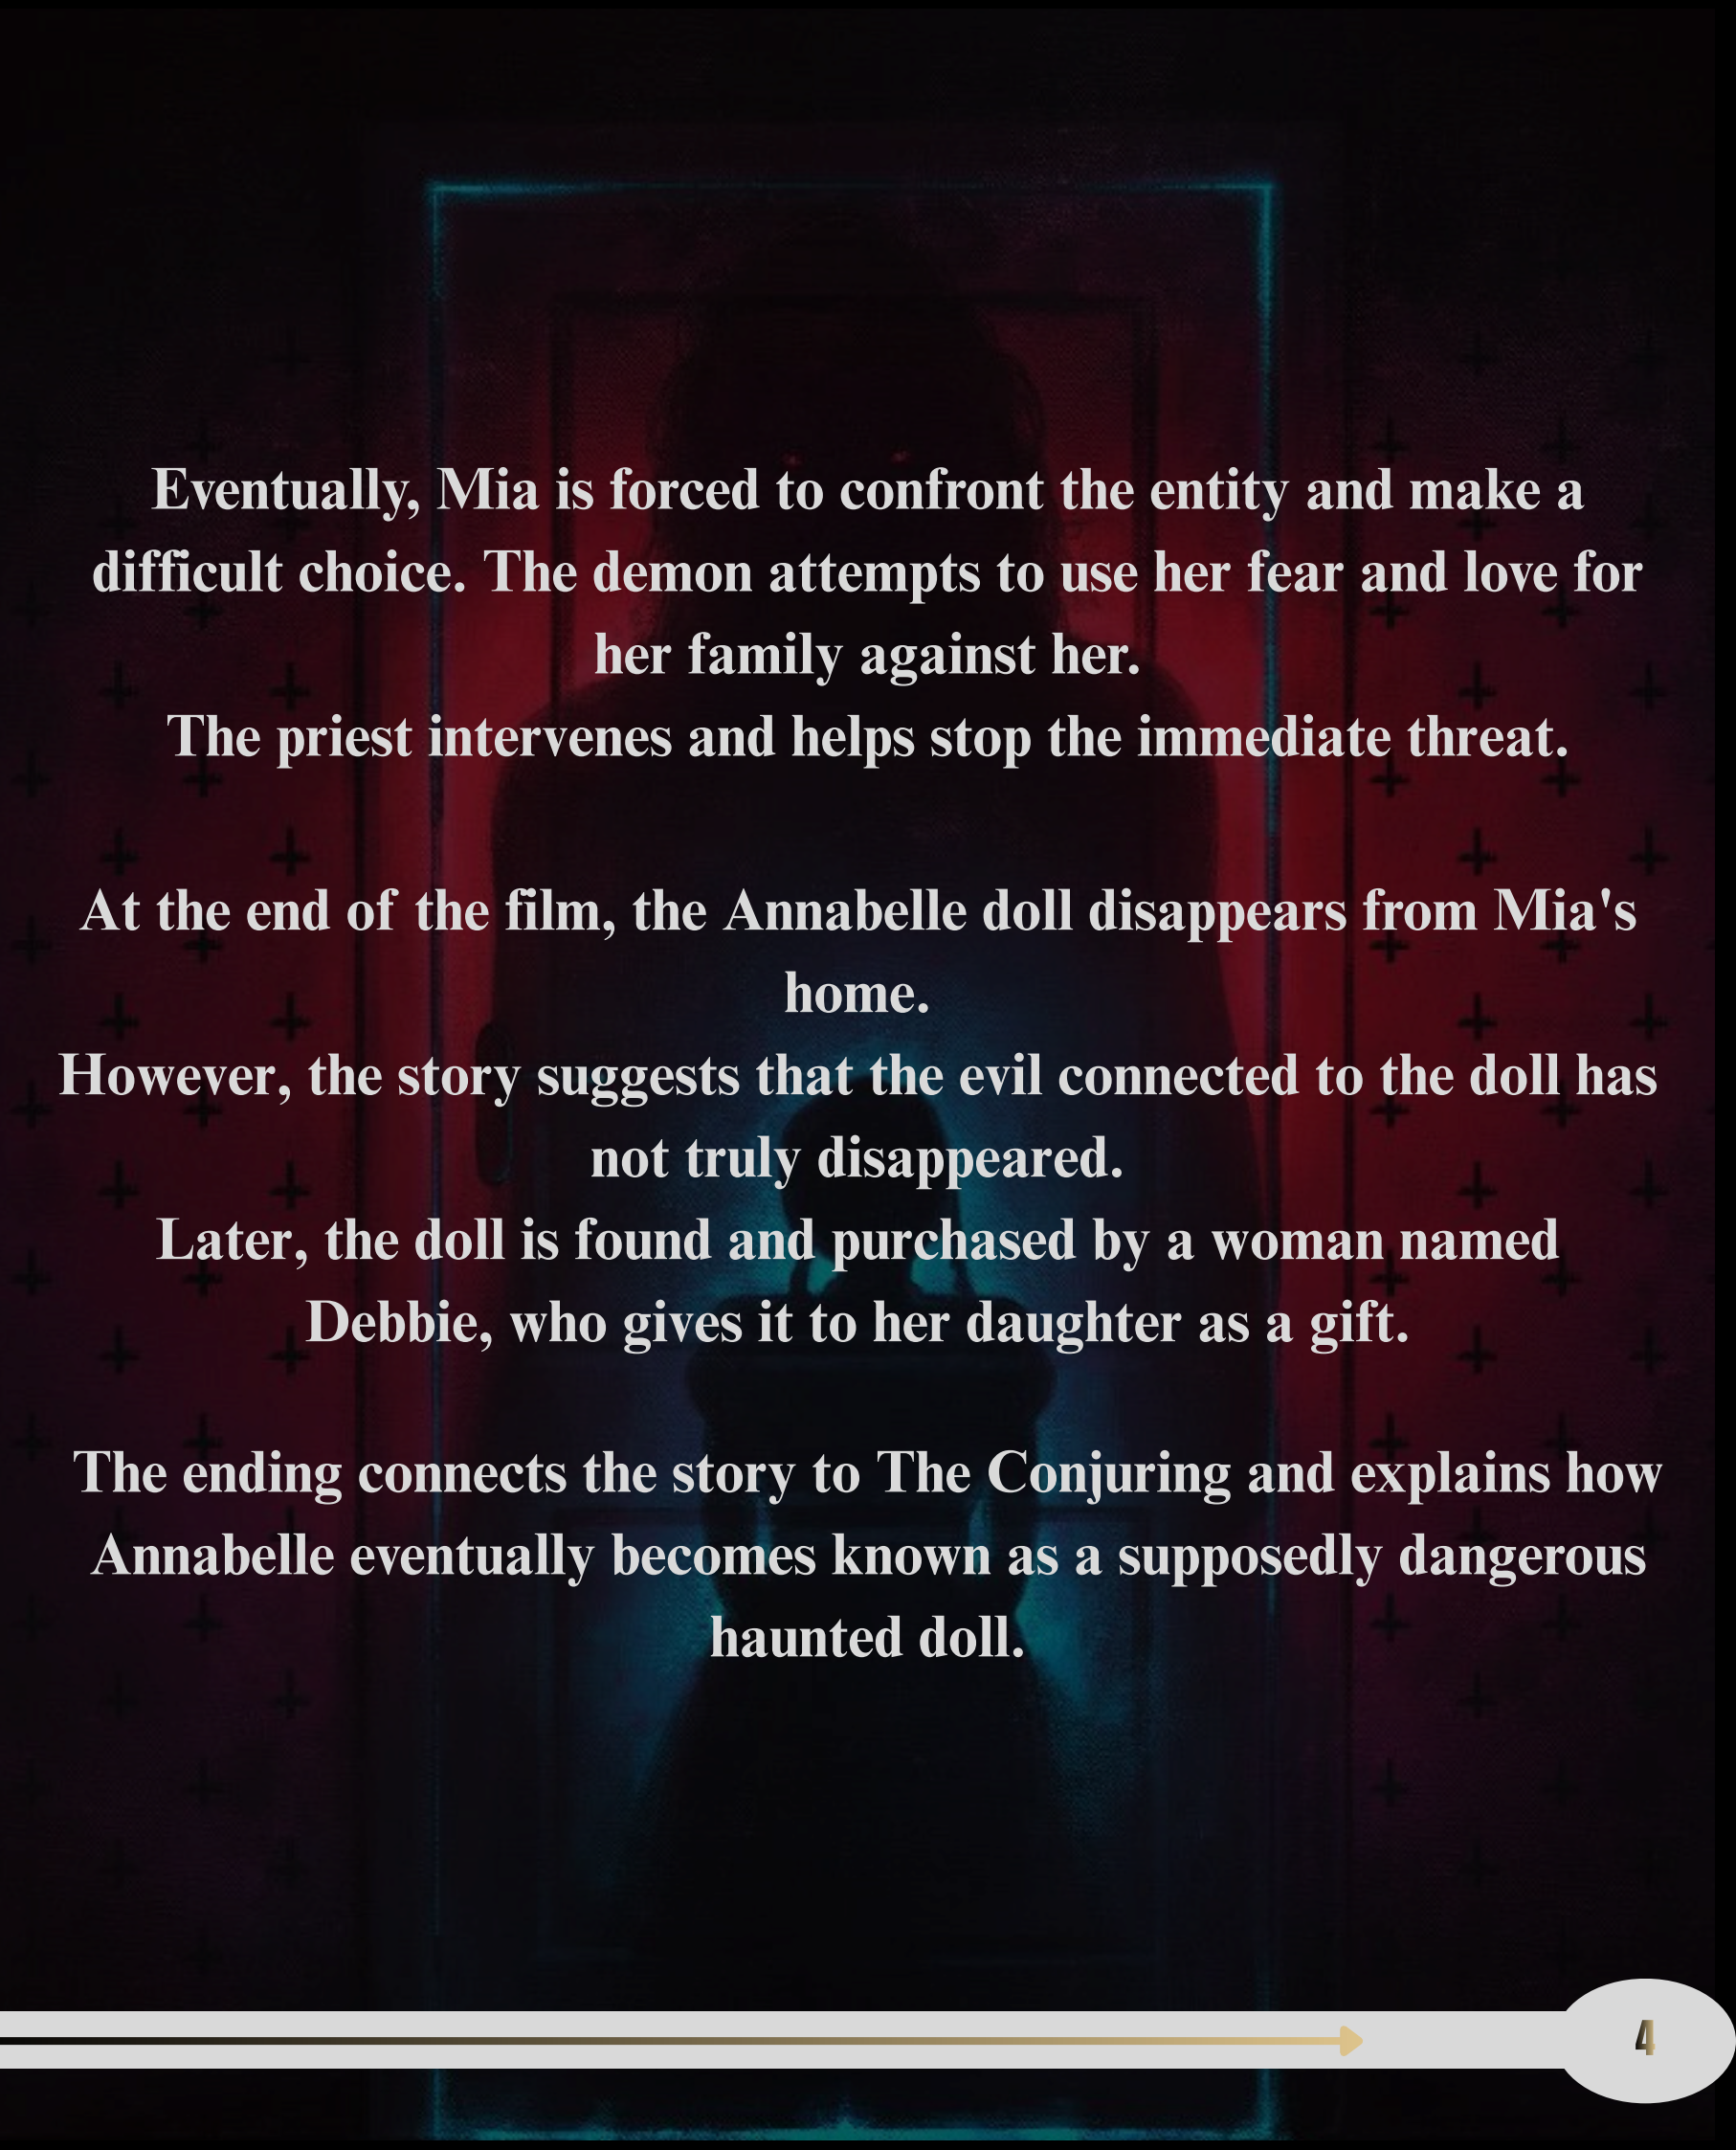

John and Mia seek help from a priest. They learn that the entity appears to be interested in something very important to them.

The supernatural attacks become more intense. Mia is repeatedly frightened and manipulated by the entity.

She also learns about Annabelle Higgins, a woman connected to the cult and the events surrounding the doll.

Mia eventually realizes that the entity is targeting her unborn baby.

The haunting puts Mia and her baby in serious danger. Mia desperately tries to protect her family while John and the priest attempt to help her.

Eventually, Mia is forced to confront the entity and make a difficult choice. The demon attempts to use her fear and love for her family against her.

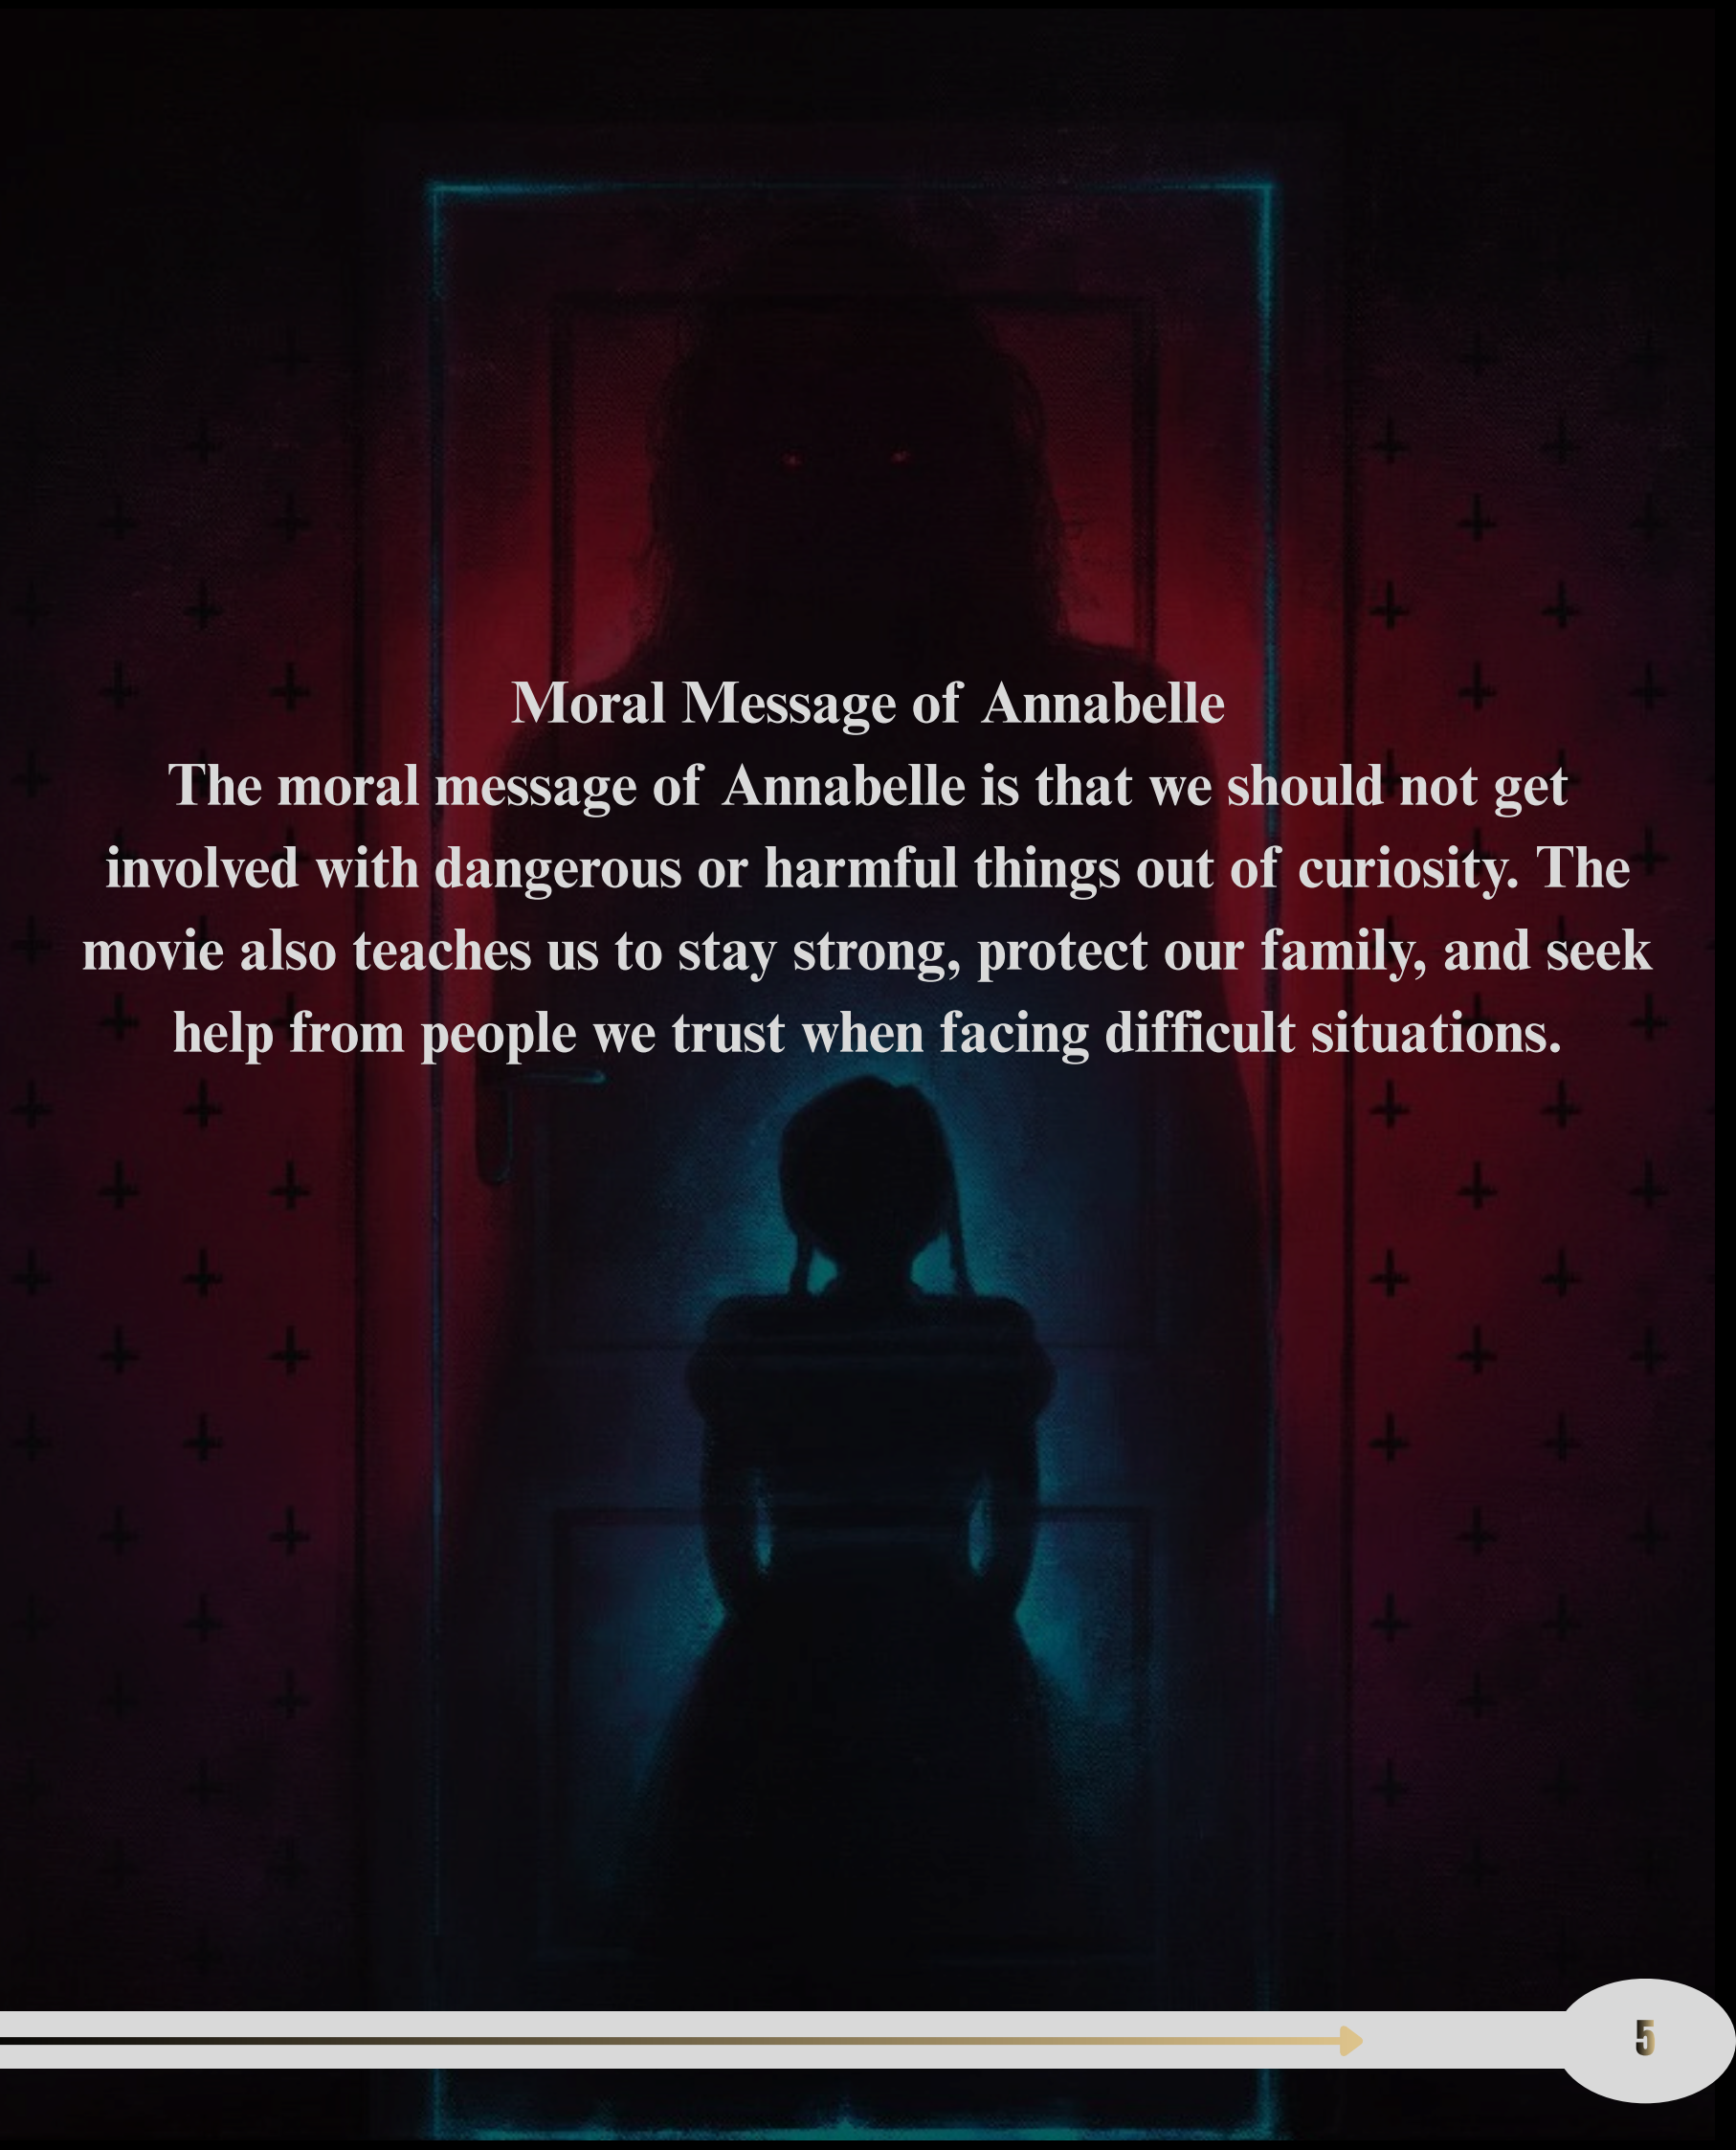

The priest intervenes and helps stop the immediate threat.

At the end of the film, the Annabelle doll disappears from Mia's home.

However, the story suggests that the evil connected to the doll has not truly disappeared.

Later, the doll is found and purchased by a woman named Debbie, who gives it to her daughter as a gift.

The ending connects the story to The Conjuring and explains how Annabelle eventually becomes known as a supposedly dangerous haunted doll.

Moral Message of Annabelle

The moral message of Annabelle is that we should not get involved with dangerous or harmful things out of curiosity. The movie also teaches us to stay strong, protect our family, and seek help from people we trust when facing difficult situations.

It all begins in a quiet house in Nerima, Tokyo. Kayako Saeki, a housewife, holds unrequited feelings for a man named Kobayashi.

When her husband, Takeo Saeki, discovers her diary and reads about her feelings, he is consumed by extreme jealousy and rage.

In a violent outburst, Takeo brutally murders Kayako by breaking her neck. He also slays their young son, Toshio, and their pet cat, Maru.

Because she dies in a state of immense trauma, rage, and agonizing pain, Kayako's spirit cannot rest, transforming her into an Onryō (a vengeful ghost). The curse (Ju-On) is born in that house: anyone who sets foot inside is marked, and their life will ultimately be claimed by the vengeful spirits of Kayako and Toshio.

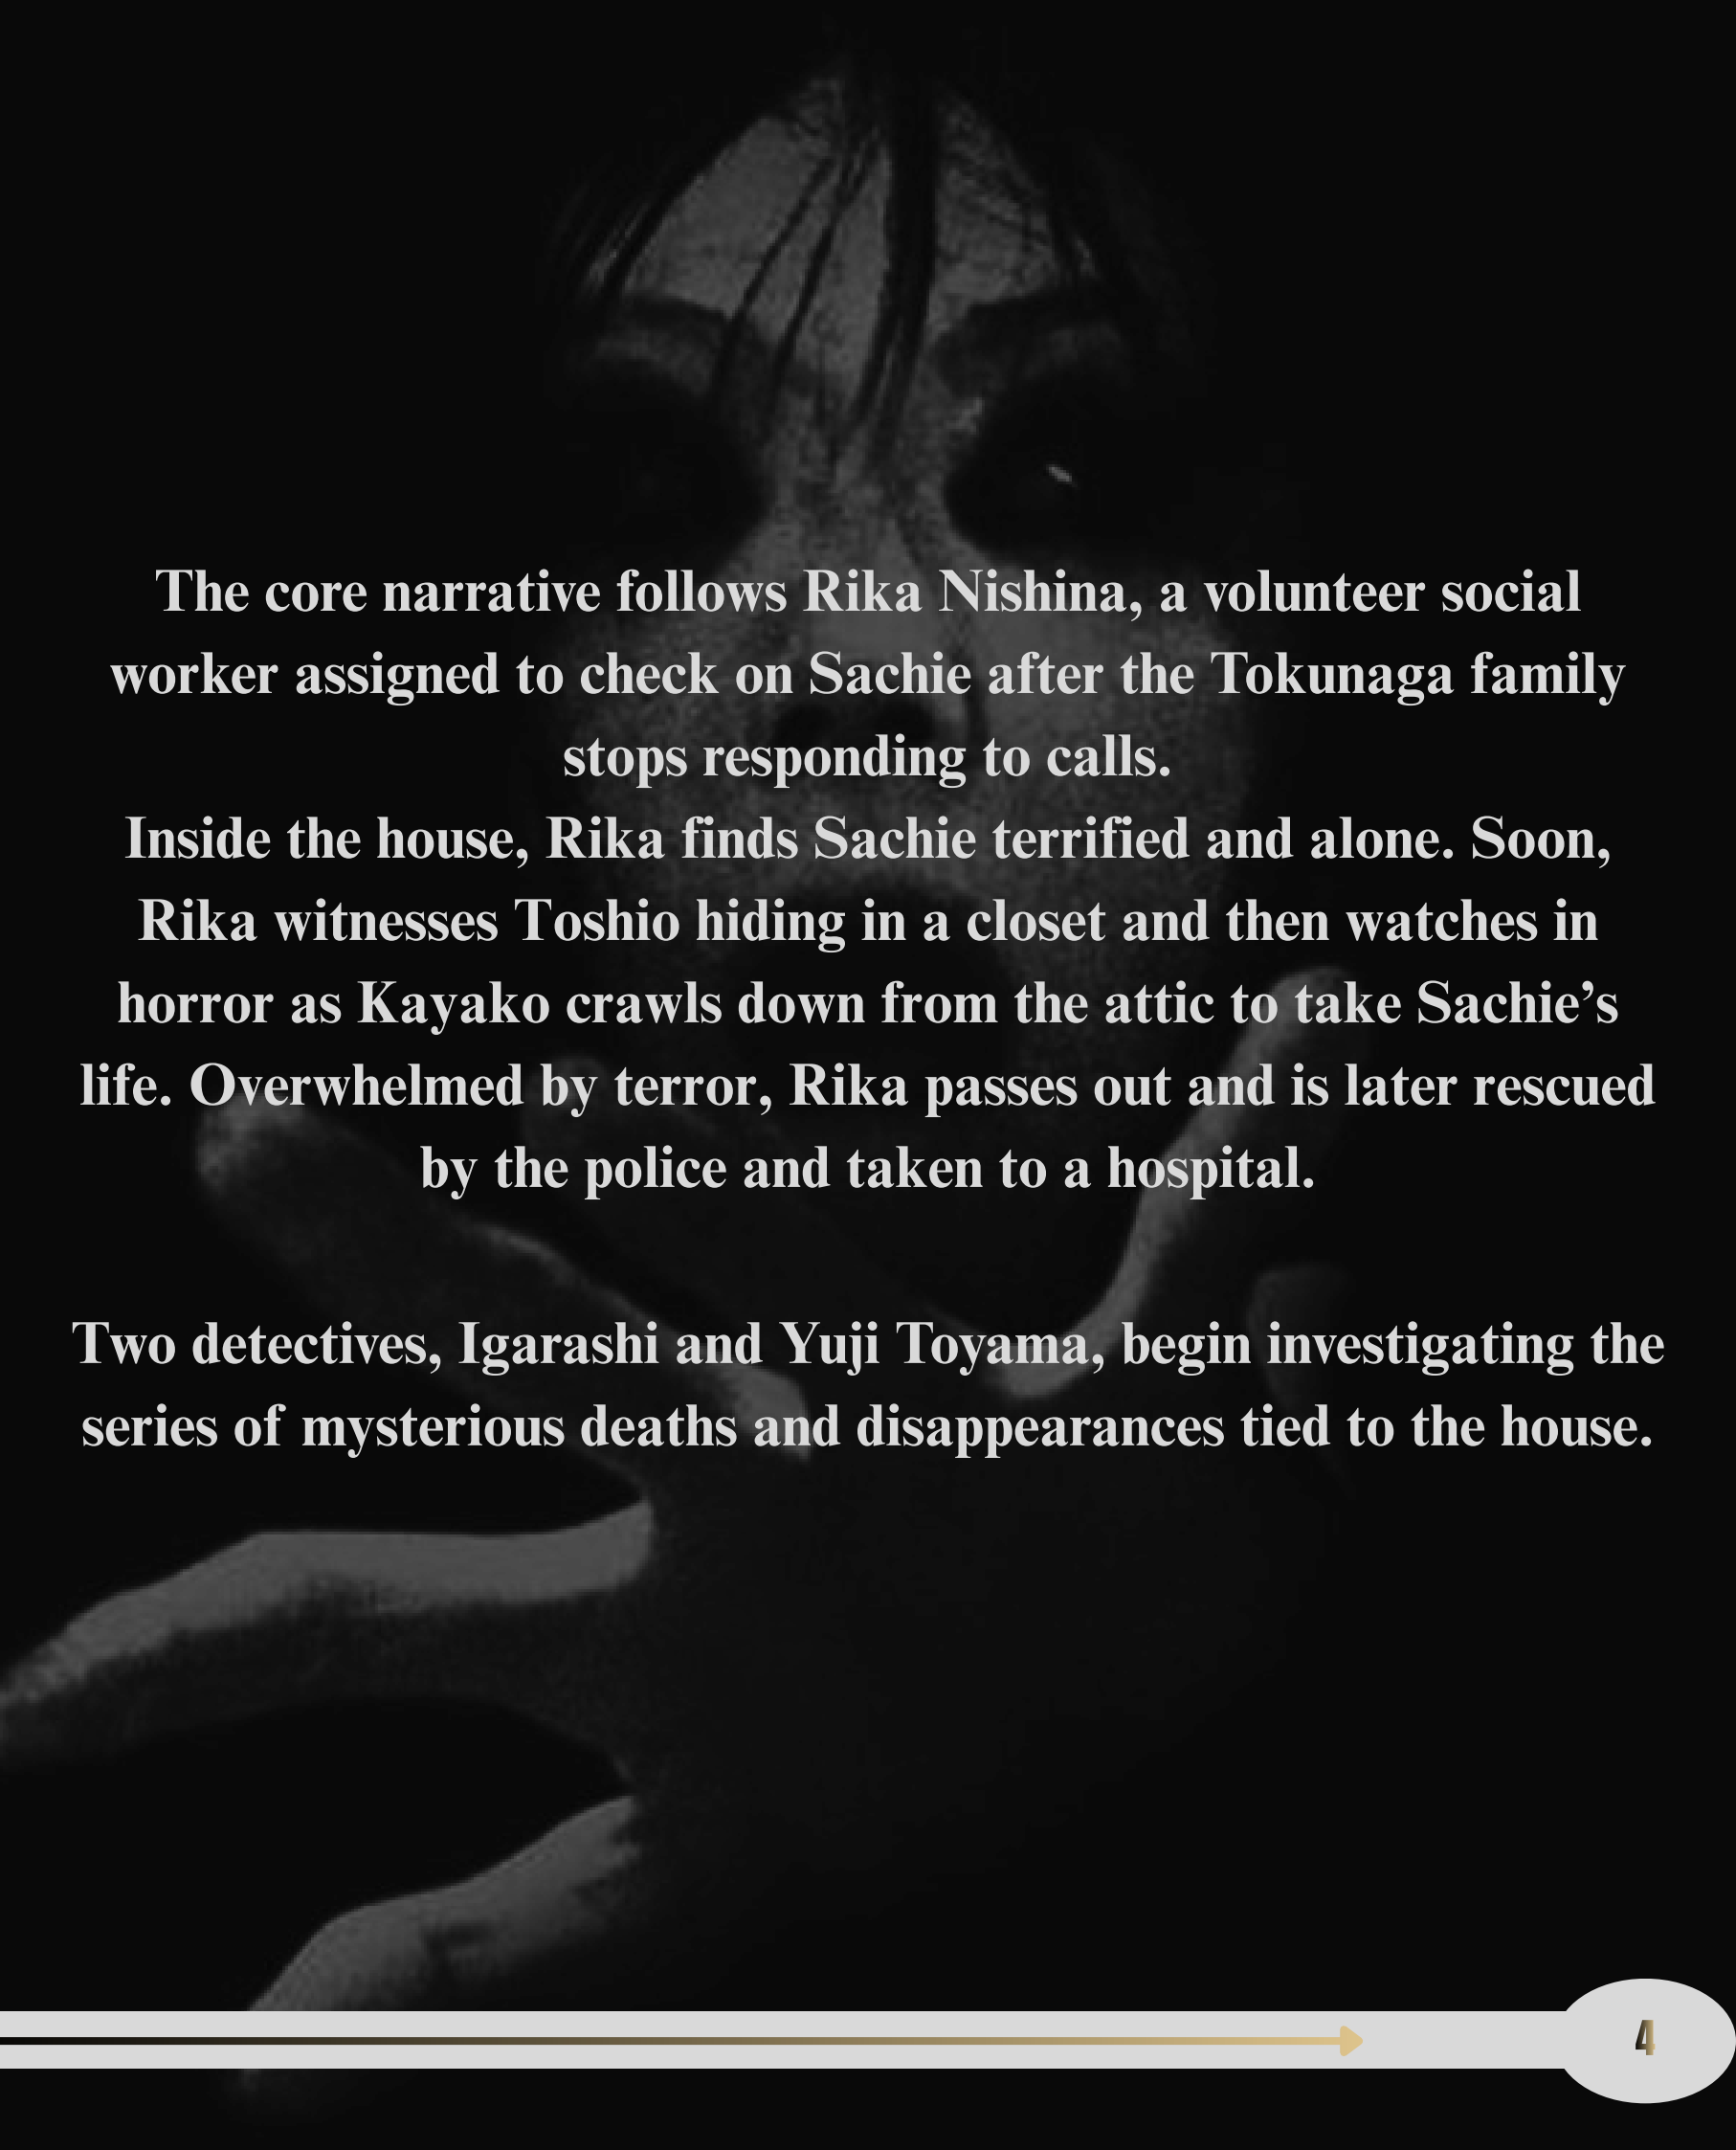

Sometime later, the Tokunaga family moves into the former Saeki residence, unaware of its grim past.

Katsuya Tokunaga and his wife, Kazumi, live there alongside Katsuya's elderly mother, Sachie, who suffers from dementia.

Shortly after moving in, Kazumi becomes Kayako's first victim.

Katsuya falls under the house's supernatural influence and disappears as well.

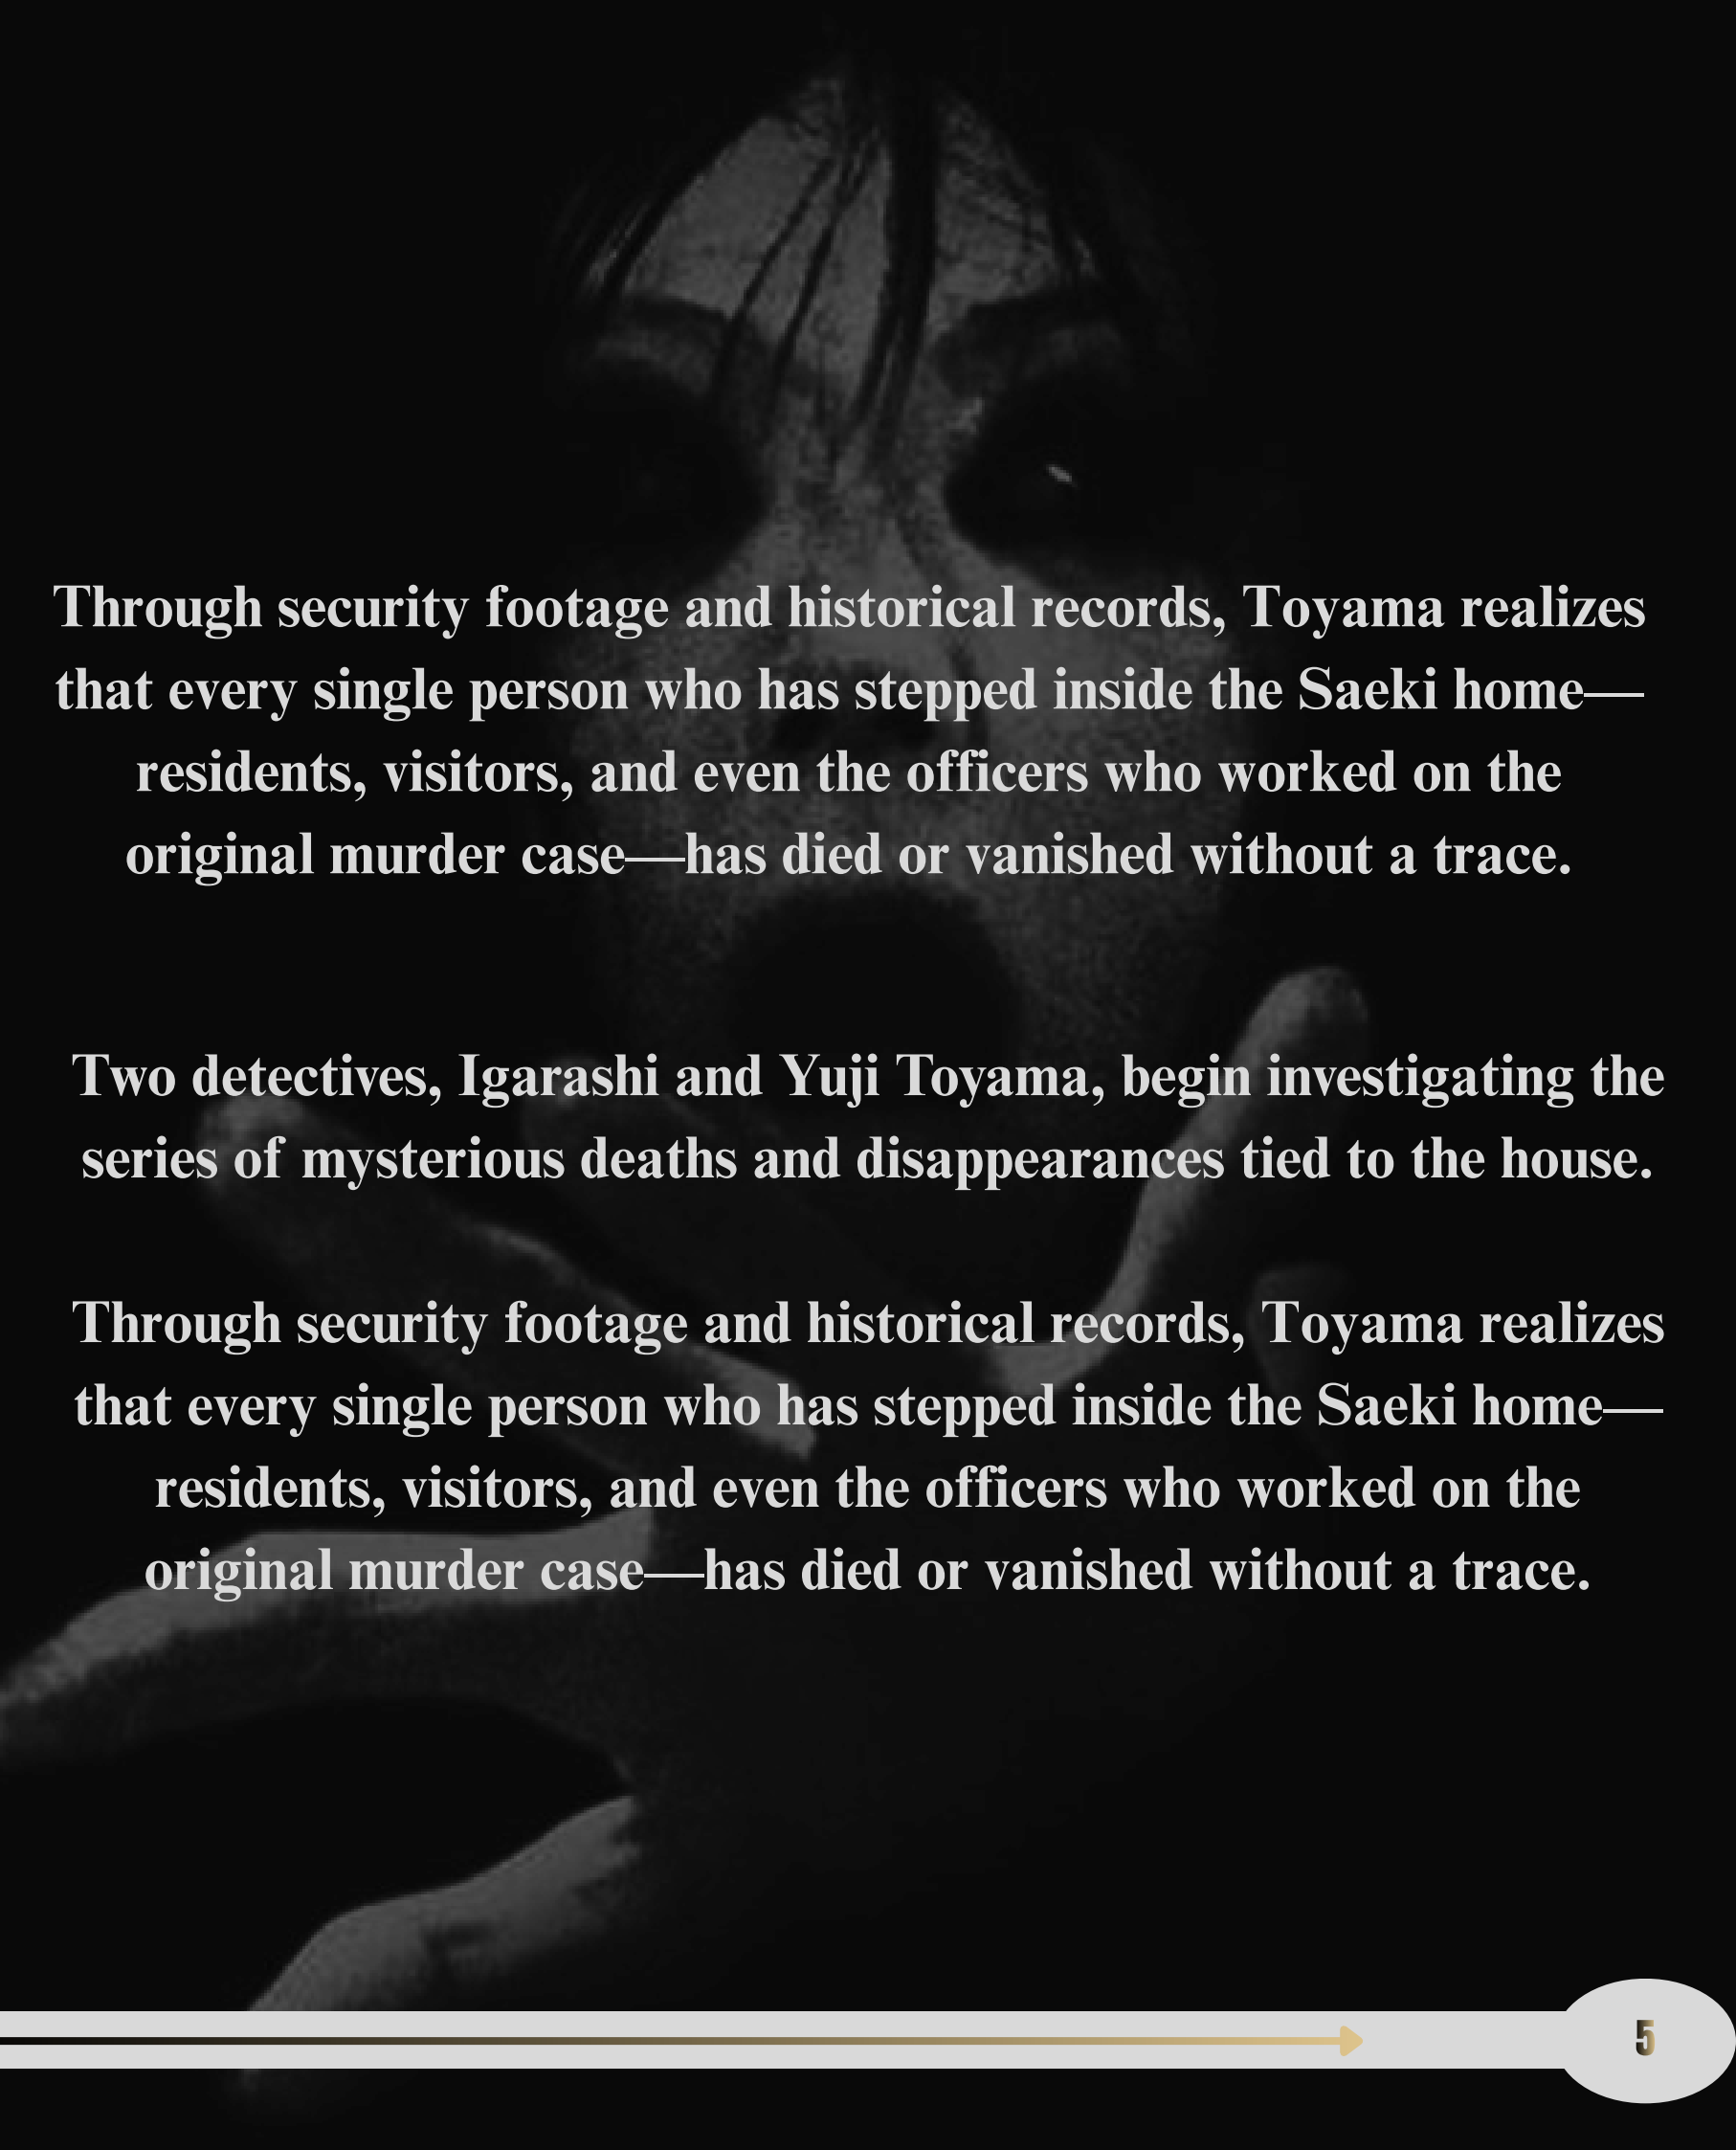

Kayako and Toshio begin haunting anyone connected to the house. Katsuya's sister, Hitomi, who visits briefly, is terrorized all the way back to her own apartment before vanishing.

The core narrative follows Rika Nishina, a volunteer social worker assigned to check on Sachie after the Tokunaga family stops responding to calls.

Inside the house, Rika finds Sachie terrified and alone. Soon, Rika witnesses Toshio hiding in a closet and then watches in horror as Kayako crawls down from the attic to take Sachie's life. Overwhelmed by terror, Rika passes out and is later rescued by the police and taken to a hospital.

Two detectives, Igarashi and Yuji Toyama, begin investigating the series of mysterious deaths and disappearances tied to the house.

Through security footage and historical records, Toyama realizes that every single person who has stepped inside the Saeki home—residents, visitors, and even the officers who worked on the original murder case—has died or vanished without a trace.

Two detectives, Igarashi and Yuji Toyama, begin investigating the series of mysterious deaths and disappearances tied to the house.

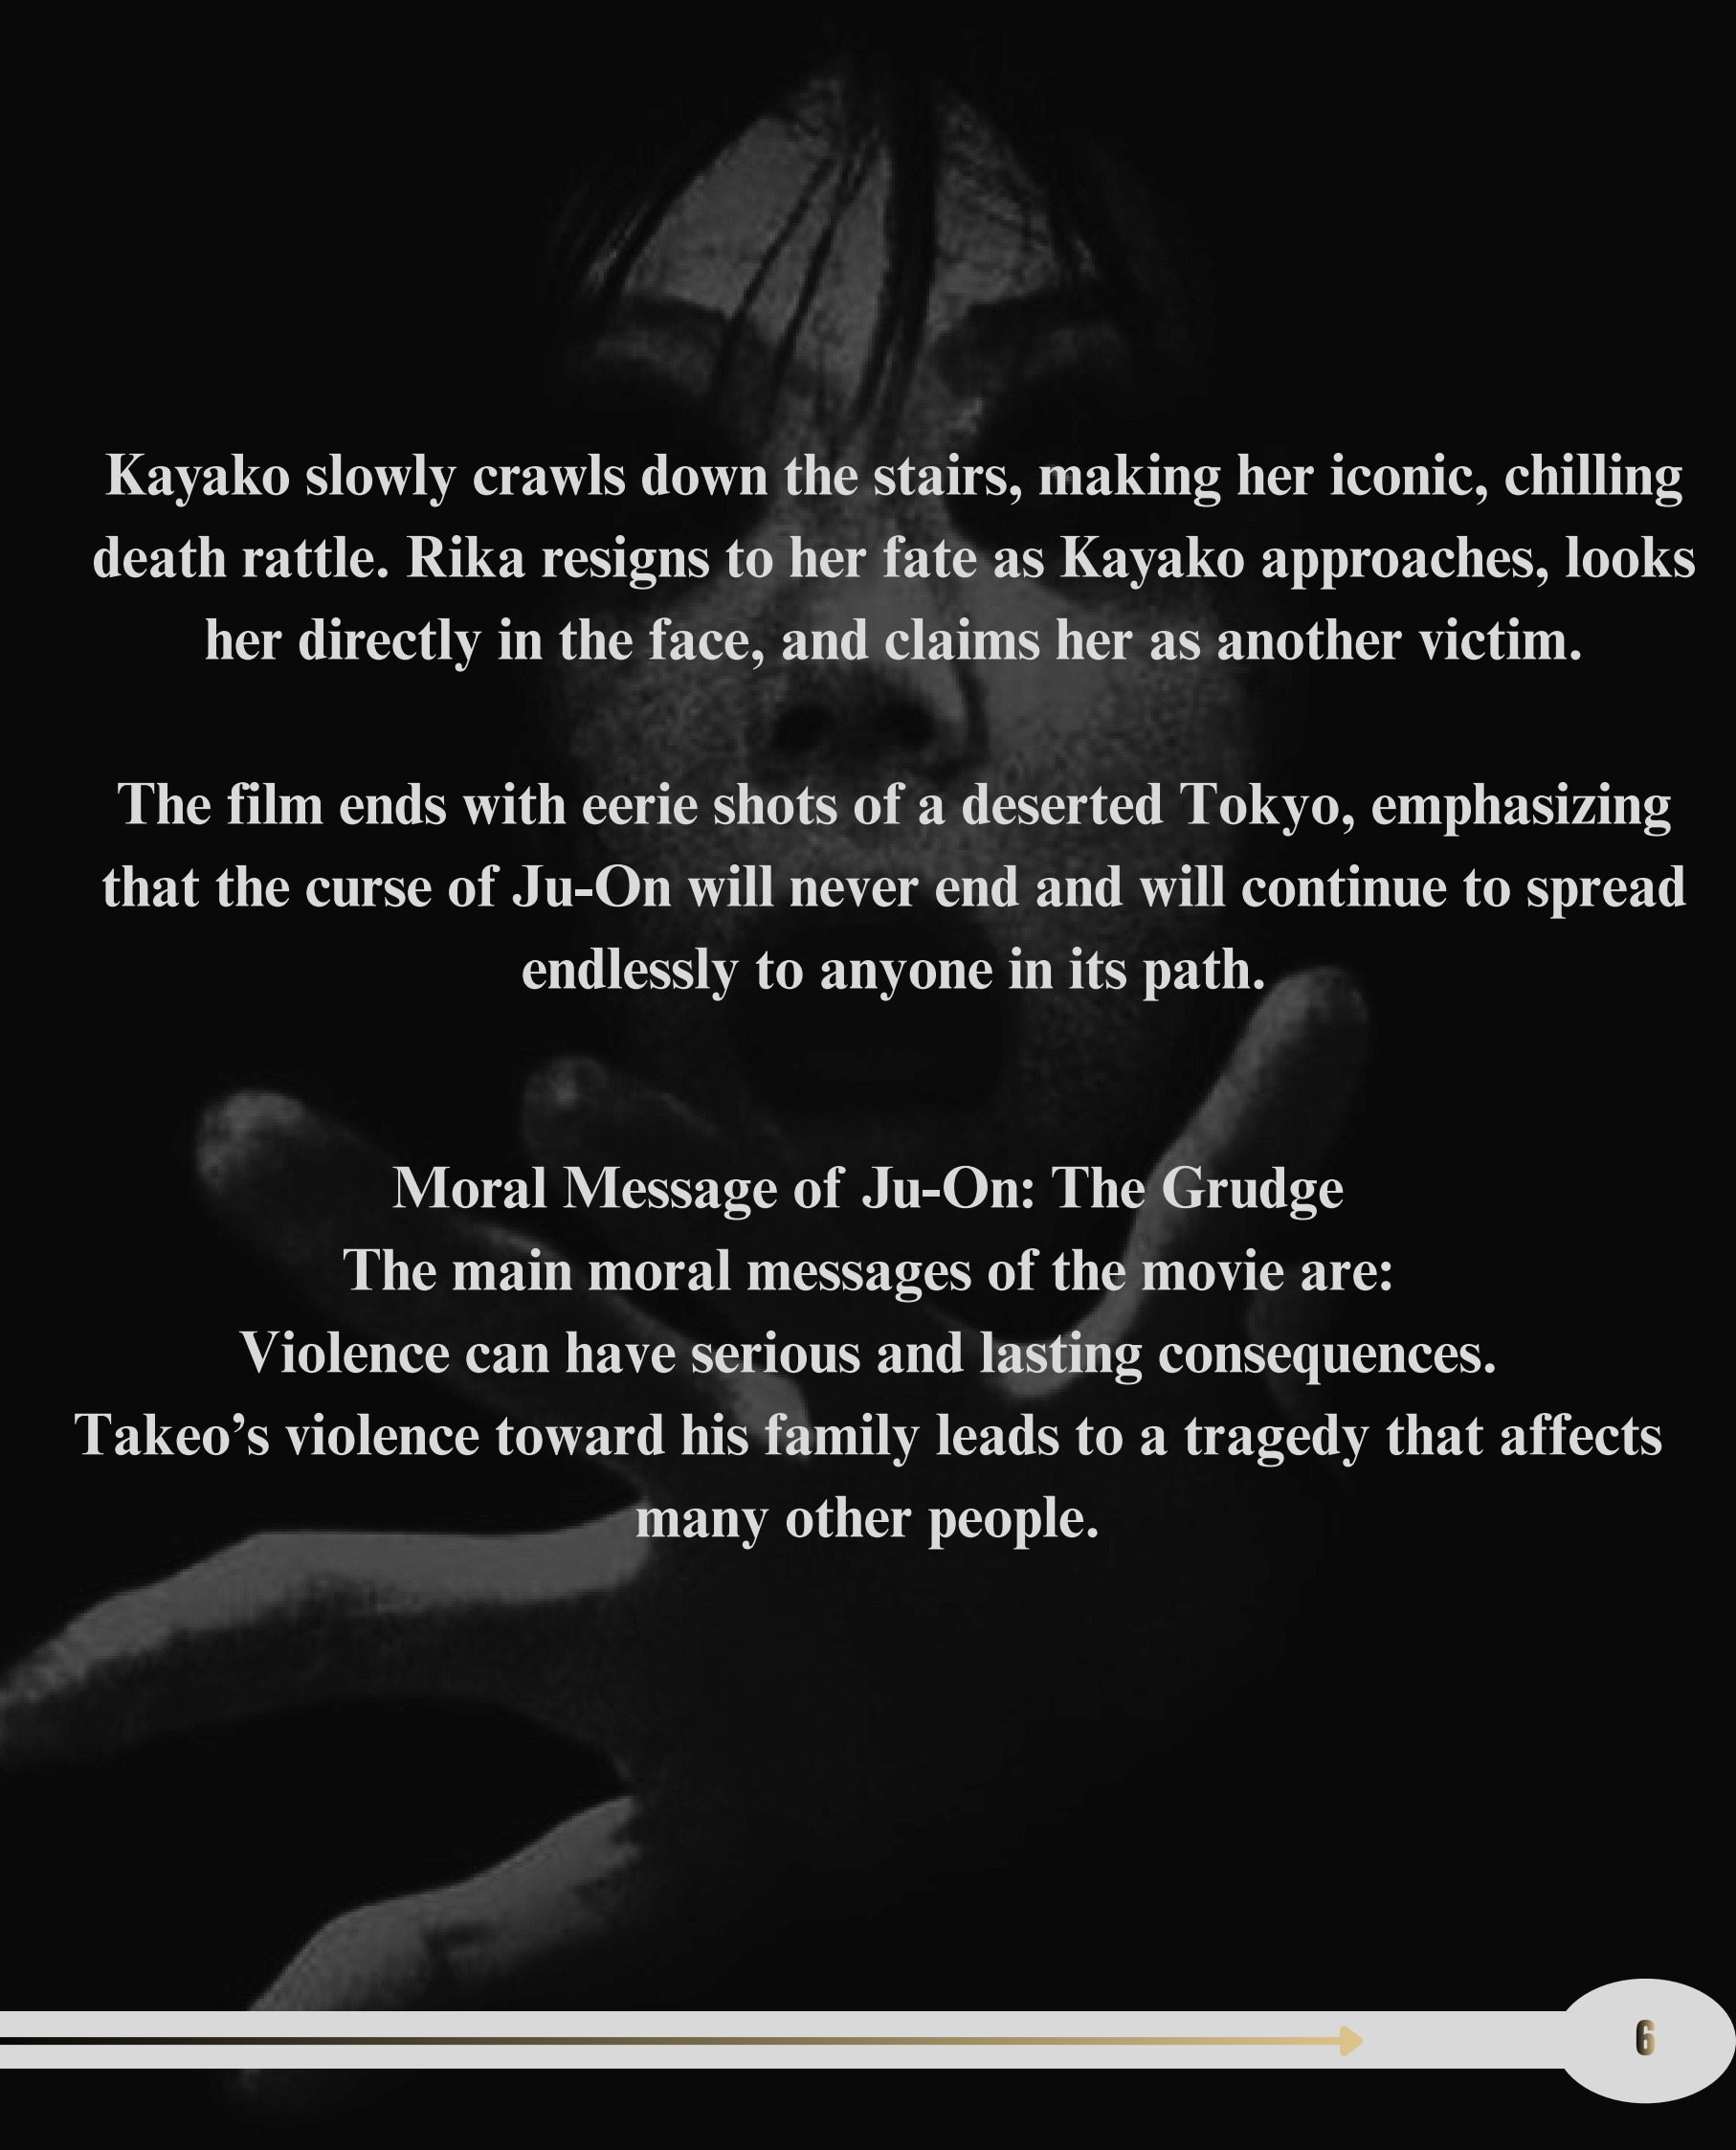

Through security footage and historical records, Toyama realizes that every single person who has stepped inside the Saeki home—residents, visitors, and even the officers who worked on the original murder case—has died or vanished without a trace.

Understanding that the curse cannot be stopped normally, Toyama attempts to burn the house down to end the cycle. However, before he can do so, he is terrorized by visions of Kayako and flees, eventually leaving the police force to raise his daughter, Izumi.

Years later, Izumi (now a high school student) is drawn back into the curse due to her father's past, ultimately being dragged away by the spirits of her haunted friends.

Rika tries to move on with her life and works at a hospital, but Kayako's curse relentlessly follows her. One by one, the people around Rika perish.

Eventually, Rika is drawn back to the haunted house by supernatural forces. On the upper floor, she experiences a horrifying vision showing how Takeo killed Kayako in the past. Rika realizes there is no escape and no way to defeat the curse.

Kayako slowly crawls down the stairs, making her iconic, chilling death rattle. Rika resigns to her fate as Kayako approaches, looks her directly in the face, and claims her as another victim.

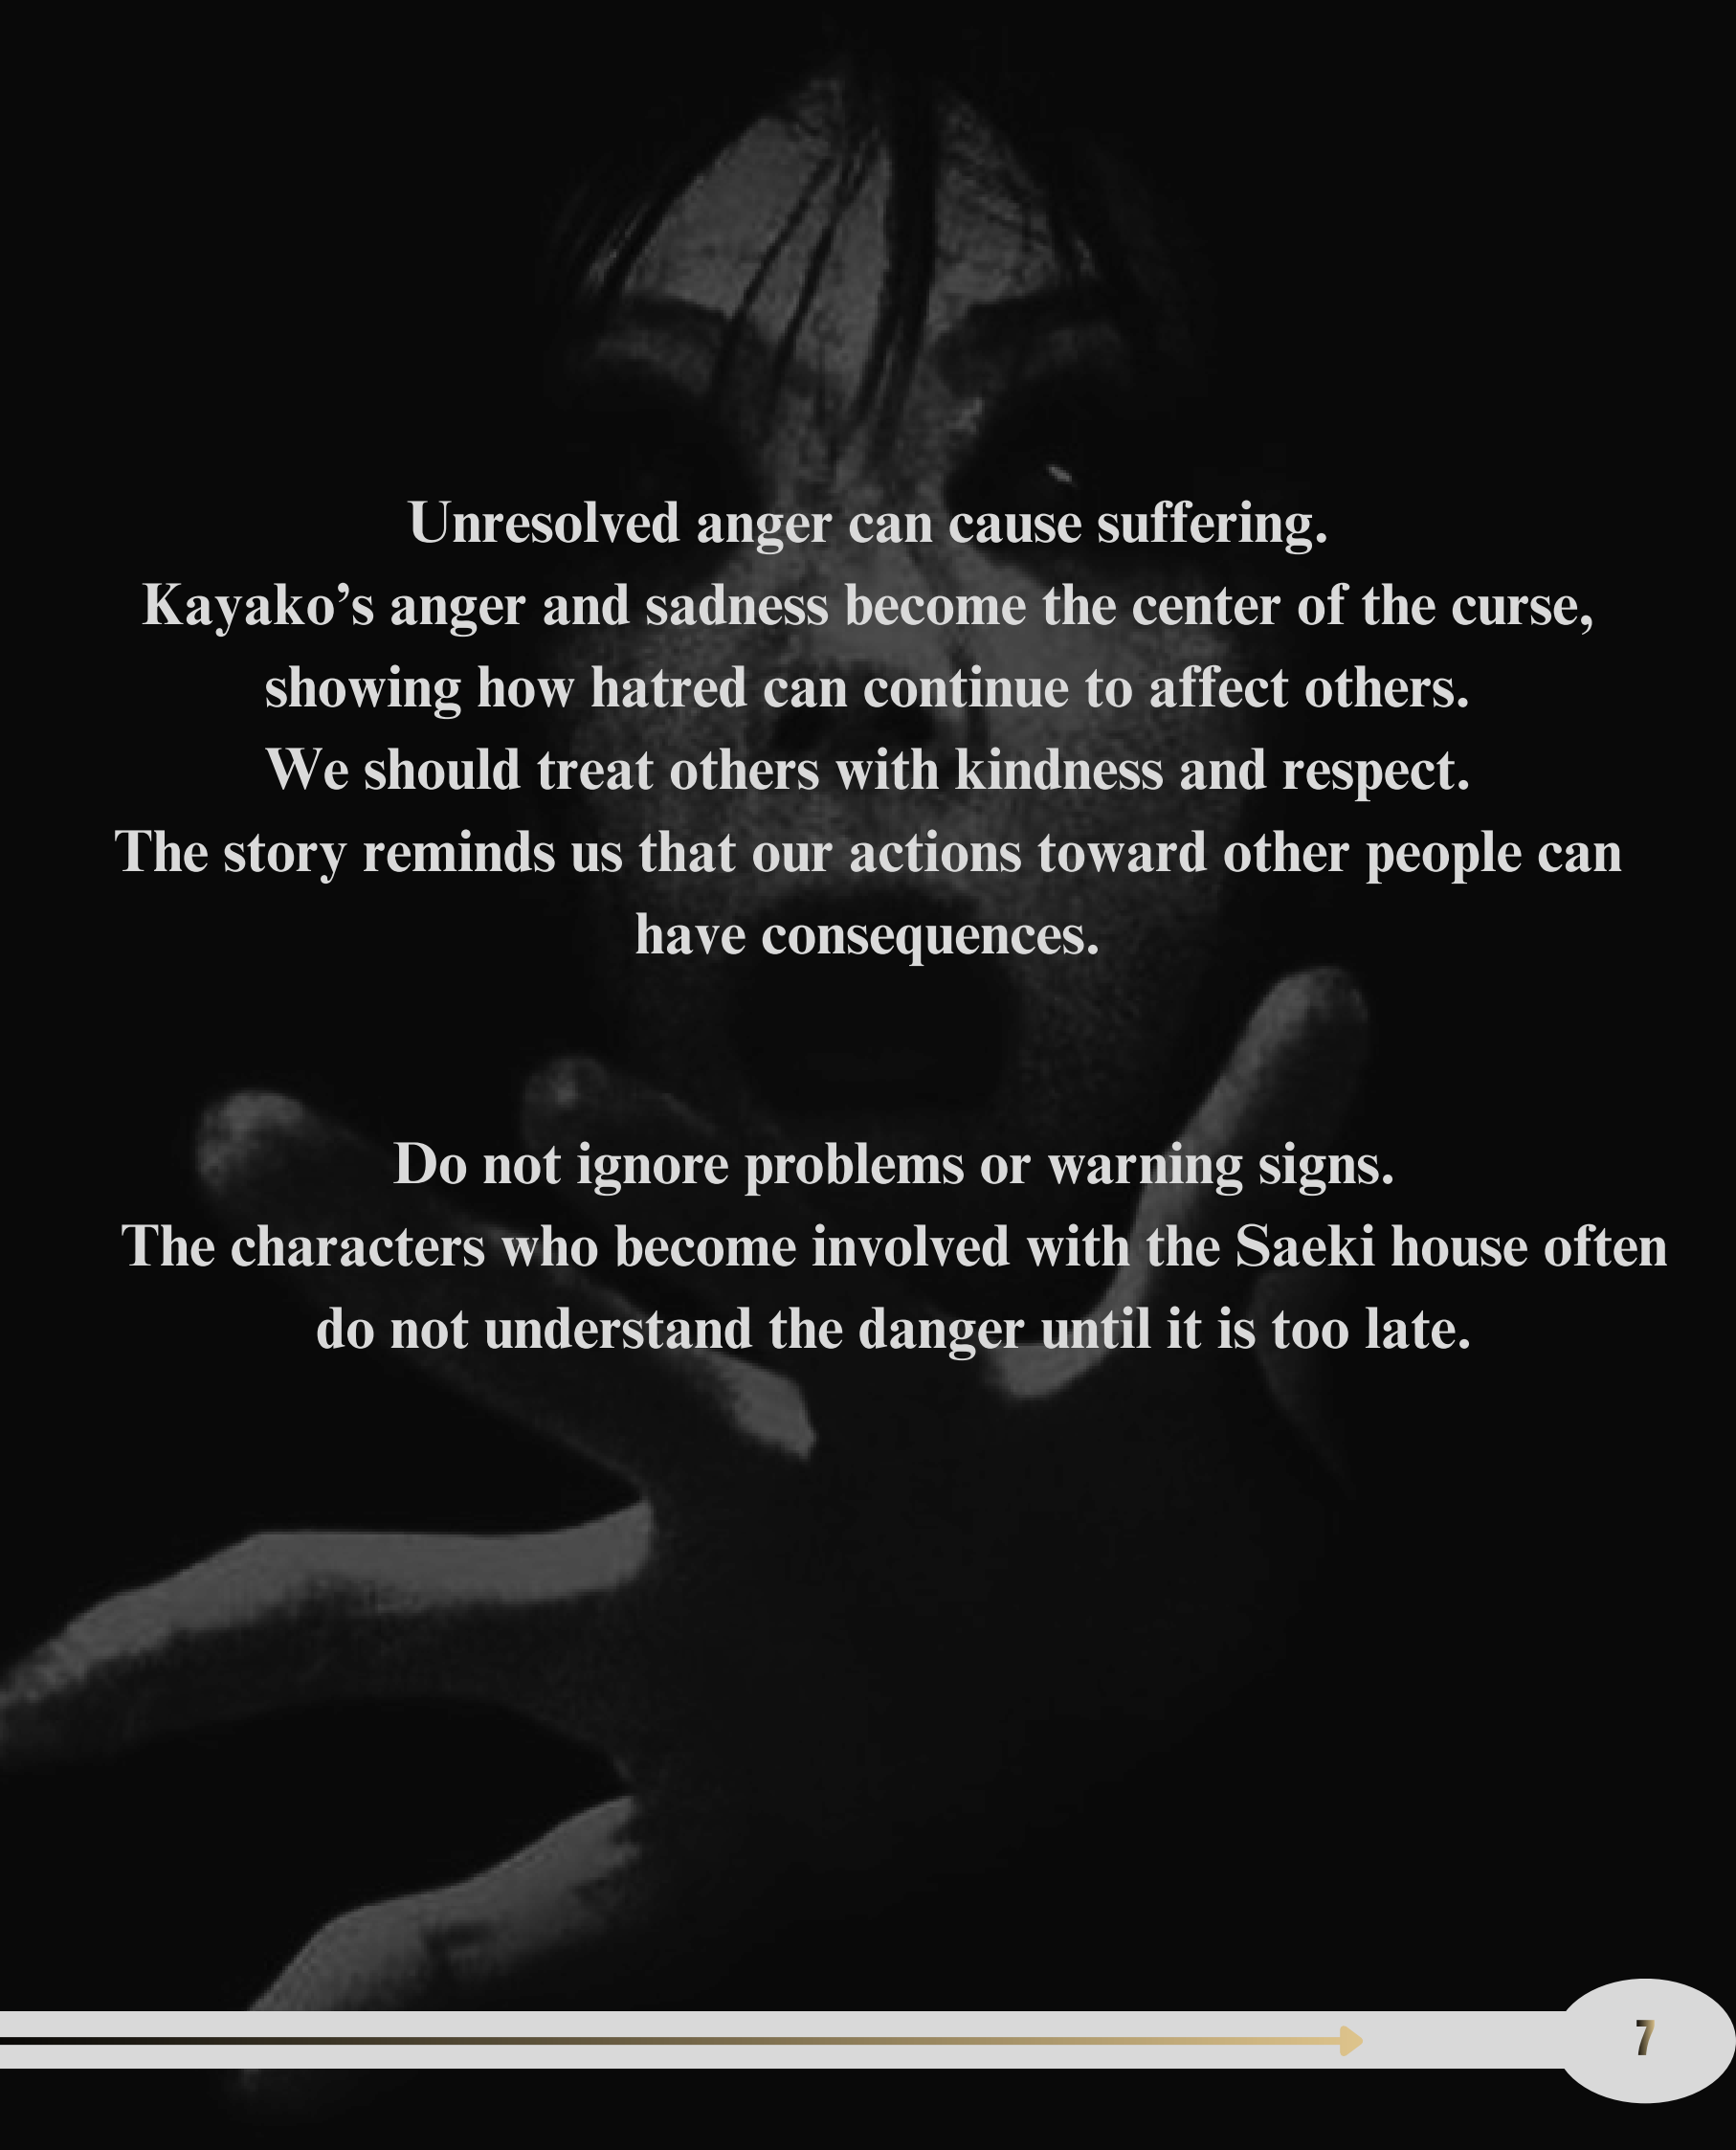

The film ends with eerie shots of a deserted Tokyo, emphasizing that the curse of Ju-On will never end and will continue to spread endlessly to anyone in its path.
