The story of Keong Emas, or the Golden Snail, tells the tale of a king who desperately wanted a son. He was granted his wish when a snail, gifted by a wise old man, turned into a beautiful woman named Dewi Galuh. The king and Dewi Galuh fell in love and had a son named Raden Putra.

However, Dewi Galuh was actually a cursed snail, and the curse would take effect if she ever saw a golden object. One day, while walking in the palace garden, she saw a golden flower and was instantly turned back into a snail. She was then swallowed by a swallow, who was later hunted down by Raden Putra.

Raden Putra eventually found the snail and released her, breaking the curse. Dewi Galuh was once again turned back into a beautiful woman, and the king was overjoyed to see his beloved wife and son reunited.

The significance of this story in Indonesian culture lies in its representation of the power of love and the consequences of breaking a curse. It also highlights the importance of trust and honesty in relationships. The story has been passed down through generations in Javanese culture, and it continues to be a beloved part of Indonesian folklore.

Alongtimeago in West Kalimantan, there lived a poor widow with her daughter. Her daughter's name was Darmi. Darmi grew up to be a very beautiful girl, but unfortunately she was arrogant and lazy.

Her mother loved her very much. Every day the mother worked hard in the fields and at the market to earn a living, so she could send Darmi to school. Because she worked so hard, Darmi's mother became thin, her skin turned dark, and her clothes were worn out.

One day, there was a big party in the next village. Darmi wanted to go there. Her kind mother walked with her to the party. Along the way, many people praised Darmi's beauty.

"Whose child is this, so beautiful?" the people asked.

Batu Menangis

Hearing that, Darmi felt proud. But when people saw her mother, who was old and shabby, they said: "Her mother looks like a servant." Darmi felt very ashamed. She did not want to be associated with her mother. Because of her pride, Darmi shouted loudly: "You are not my mother! I don't have an ugly mother like you!"

The mother was very sad to hear her daughter's words. She cried and prayed to God. "Oh God, if my child truly does not consider me her mother, then please punish her!"

Suddenly Darmi's body became stiff. Her legs turned to stone, then her whole body. The only thing left was tears that kept flowing from her eyes.

Since that day, the stone was called Batu Menangis, the Crying Stone, because it looked like tears were still dripping from it

Moral lesson Batu Menagis

1. Always respect and love your parents

No matter how poor or old they are, parents deserve our love and respect.

Hurting them with words is a big mistake.

2. Don't be arrogant because of beauty or status

Darmi was proud of her beauty and looked down on her own mother.

Arrogance will only bring regret.

3. Be grateful for your family

We should be thankful for our parents and never be ashamed of them in front of others.

4. Think before you speak

Harsh words can hurt people deeply. Darmi's rude words to her mother led to a tragic ending.

5. Every action has consequences

Because of her disobedience and cruelty, Darmi was punished and turned into stone.

The Legend of Situ Bagendit

Once upon a time, in a fertile village in Garut, West Java, there lived a very rich woman named Nyai Endit. She had a lot of wealth, land, and food. However, despite being rich, Nyai Endit was known as a greedy and stingy woman. She did not like helping poor people.

One day, the village experienced a famine. Many villagers had difficulty finding food. They went to Nyai Endit and asked for help. However, instead of helping them, Nyai Endit sold food at very high prices. She did not feel sorry for the poor villagers.

One day, an old beggar came to Nyai Endit's house. He asked her for some food and water. Unfortunately, Nyai Endit refused to help him and rudely told him to leave.

The background of the slide is a dark, atmospheric illustration of a flooded village. In the foreground, a person in a red robe is seen from behind, looking out over the water. In the middle ground, several people are in small boats or on stilts, navigating the floodwaters. The scene is dimly lit, with a warm, golden light emanating from the left, possibly from a setting or rising sun, creating a somber and dramatic mood.

Situ Bagendit

The old beggar then planted his walking stick into the ground. He warned Nyai Endit and the villagers to learn from what had happened. When he pulled the stick out, water suddenly came out of the ground.

The water continued to flow and eventually flooded the village. The villagers tried to save themselves. Nyai Endit also tried to save her belongings, but the water continued to rise and flooded everything.

According to the legend, the flooded area later became a lake called Situ Bagendit.

The story teaches us that we should not be greedy, selfish, or arrogant. We should help people who are in need and share what we have with others.

Moral lesson (Situ Bagendit)

1. Do not be stingy and greedy, because the wealth we have should also be used to help others.
2. We should care about and be willing to help people who are in need.
3. Do not be arrogant because of your wealth, because wealth can disappear at any time.
4. Every bad action can bring bad consequences to ourselves.
5. Be humble, generous, and willing to share with others.
